1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.
 The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatible for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.
2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.
 That huge great body which the giant bore
 Was vanish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass
 Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Spenser.
 A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.
3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.
 I have ventur'd,
 Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
 These many summers in a sea of glory,

BLA

But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakespeare.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-GENA. n. s. [colutea, Lat.] A plant.

BLADE. n. s. [blæb, bleb, Sax. bled, Fr.]

The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use.

Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round.

Thomson.

BLADE n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle.
It is usually taken for a weapon; and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He sought all round about, his thirsty blade

To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. F. Quen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays

A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance.

L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade.

Prior.

BLADE of the shoulder. } n. s. The bone

BLADEBONE. } called by anatomi-mists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a blade- bone. Pope.

To BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,

Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shut.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,

Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,

But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryd.

BLAIN. n. s. [blegene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch.]

A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,

Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop

Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh invade,

And all his people. Milton.

BLA

When'er I hear a rival nam'd,

I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which, breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable;
faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. s. [from blamable.]

Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Cul-pably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r

Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men

May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrus, you too far did tempt your fate:

'T is true, your duty to me it became;

But; praising that, I must your conduct blame.

Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,

Something to blame, and something to commend.

Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomoreus he blamed of inconsiderate rashness;
for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation.

Kneller's History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confess to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure

The taints and blames I laid upon myself,

For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not in use.

Therewith upon his crest

With rigour so outrageous he smit,

That a large share it he'd out of the rest,

And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French à tort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift.

Shakespeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but,
whether they were to blame in the manner.

Stillingfleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLAMEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.]

Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,

If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,

Thy mother took into her blameful bed

Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakspeare.

BLAMELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacity, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLAMELESSNESS. n. s. [from blameless.]

Innocence; exemption from blame.

Having resolved with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferior agent. Hammond.

BLAMELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,

While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath. Jasbua.

BLAMER. n. s. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,

And deniz'd a stranger, who, mistaught

By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought Virtues in corners. Donne.

BLAMEWORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.

TO BLANCH. v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such sights,

And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,

When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakspeare.

A way of whitening wax cheaply may be of use; and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be bisket, raisins of the sun, and a few blanch'd almonds. Wiceman.

3. To slur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away. Not in use.

- quite escape the rod,
- Because the insult's not to man, but God?
- Pope.*
- BLASPHEMOUS. adj.
- [from
- blaspheme*
- .] It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by
- Milton*
- with it on the second.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

BLA

Man, take heed how thou the gods dost move,
To cause full wrath, which thou canst not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove.

Sidney.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous?

Milton.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses.

Tillotson.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this!

South.

BLASPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blaspheme.]

Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty?

Swift.

BLASPHEMY. n. s. [from blaspheme.]

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing.

Ayliffe.

But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must.

Shakespeare.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine.

Hammond.

BLAST. n. s. [from blætz, Sax. blasen,
Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake
them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakespeare.

Welcome, then,

Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst Owes nothing to thy blasts.

Shakespeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave.

Fairfax.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,
And on the secret shelves with fury cast.

Dryd.

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind musick.

Then imitate the action of the tyger.

Shakespeare.

He blew his trumpet—the angelic blast
Fill'd all the regions.

Milton.

The Veline fountains, and sulphureous Nar,
Shake at the baleful blast, the signal of the war.

Dryden.

Whether there be two different goddesses called Fame, or one goddess sounding two different trumpets, it is certain villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former.

Swift.

3. The stroke of a malignant planet; the infection of any thing pestilential. [from the verb To blast.]

By the blast of God they perish.

Job.

TO BLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with some sudden plague or calamity.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes! infect her beauty,
You sensuck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride:

Shakespeare.

BLA

Oh! Portius, is there not some chosen curse,
Some hidden thunder in the store of heaven,
Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man
Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin?

Addison.

2. To make to wither.

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way.

BLAZE. n. s. [blaze, a torch, Saxon.]

1. A flame; the light of the flame: blaze implies more the light than the heat.

—The main blaze of it is past; but a small thing would make it flame again.

Shakespeare.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight.

Dryden.

What groans of men shall fill the martial field!
How fierce a blaze his flaming pile shall yield!

What fun'ral pomp shall floating Tiber see!

2. Publication; wide diffusion of report.

For what is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmixt?

Milton.

3. Blaze is a white mark upon a horse, descending from the forehead almost to the nose.

Farrier's Dict.

TO BLAZE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flame; to show the light of a flame.
Thus you may long live an happy instrument

BLA

Beg pardon of thy prince, and call thee back. Shakspeare.

When beggars die, there are no comets seen;
The heav'n's themselves blaze forth the death of princes. Shakspeare.

But he went out, and began to publish it much,
and to blaze abroad the matter. Mar.

Such musick worthiest were to blaze
The peerless height of her immortal praise,
Whose lustre leads us. Milton.

Far beyond
The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd, Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about. Milton.

Whose follies, blaz'd about, to all are known,
And are a secret to himself alone. Granville.

But, mortals, know, 'tis still our greatest pride
To blaze those virtues which the good would hide. Pope.

2. To blazon; to give an account of ensigns armorial in proper terms. Not used.

This, in ancient times, was called a fierce;
and you should then have blazed it thus: he bears a fierce, sable, between two fierce, or. Peacham.

BLAZER. n. s. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime;
His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime. Spenser.

To BLAZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

BOLTSPRIT. } n. s. A mast running out

BOWSPRIT. } at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the bolt-sprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowspit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dict.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and bolt-sprit, would I flame distinctly. Shakespeare.

BO'LUS. n. s. [Bolus.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by dylsters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. s. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little first noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1532, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory.

Sidney.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile

Than is a slave in base servility.

Shaksp.

Our cage

We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,

And sing our bondage freely.

Shaksp.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,

Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard.

Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way.

Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money.

South.

BO'NDMAID. n. s. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself, To make a bondmaid and a slave of me.

Shaks.

BO'NDMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bond-man free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him.

Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;

Not that which bondmen from their masters find.

Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. s. [from bond and ser- want.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. s. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators

Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bonds-women.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.

BONE. n. s. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid part of the body of an animal.

The bones are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken as it must have been had it been solid and smaller.

Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold.

Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone.

Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Aesop's hound's contending for the bone, Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone.

Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puss had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel.

L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice, And dextrously to throw the lucky dice: To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away; And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BO'NEYACE n. s. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace.

Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace.

Spectator.

BO'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face, Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums, And dash the brains out.

Shakespeare.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.]

To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting.

Wiseman's Surgery.

A phantasin, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shakspeare.

BO'OKSELLER. n. s. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in, which there was false divinity. Walton.

BO'OKWORM. n. s. [from book and worm.] 1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guard.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope's Letters.

BO'OLY. n. s. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in hordes; being the very same that the Irish boodies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats. Spenser.

BOOM. n. s. [from boom, a tree, Dutch.] 1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the studding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainsail and foresail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to show the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown. Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroic worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman and who cut the boom. Dryden.

To BOOM. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can. Dict.

2. To swell and fall together.

Booming o'er his head
The billows clos'd; he's number'd while the dead. Young.

Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid,

BOON. n. s. [from bene, Sax. a petition.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,

And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give. Shakspeare.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperor, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The blust'ring fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is given; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden's Fables.

What rhetorick didst thou use
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me! Addis.

BOON. adj. [bon, Fr.] Gay; merry; as, a boon companion.

Satiate at length,
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself she pleasingly began. Par. Lost.

I know the infirmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups. Arbutnot.

BOOR. n. s. [beer, Dutch; xebune, Sax.] A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a malecontent. L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life. Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and baffled by a boor. Dryden.

BO'ORISH. adj. [from boor.] Clownish; rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave, the society, which, in the boorish, is company, of this female. Shakspeare.

He is þæt bit and bote,
And bet biþoen dome.]

1. To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it?

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny that aliens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them without sermons. Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain. Shak.

If we shun
The purpos'd end, or here lie, fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun? Fairfax.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe? Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit.

And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

BOOT. n. s. [from the verb.] 1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

BOO

My gravity

Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakespeare.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakespeare.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard.

Herbert.

He might have his mind and manners formed,
and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

fair by the fall of a booth. Swift.

- BOOTLESS. adj. [from boot.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

BOR

When those accursed messengers of hell
Came to their wicked man, and 'gan to tell
Their bootless pains and ill succeeding night.

Spenser.

God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expense of travel to wander in darkness.

Hooker.

Bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shak.

Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers:
He seeks my life. Shakespeare.

2. Without success.
Doth not Brutus bootless kneel? Shakespeare.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weather beaten back.

Shakespeare.

BO'OTY. n. s. [buys, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty.

Milton.

His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. L'Estrange.
For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakespeare.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botté, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty.

Dryden.

- BOPE'EP. n. s. [from bo and peep.] The act of looking out, and drawing back as if frightened, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bopeep,
And go the fools among. Shakespeare.

Rivers.

That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part th' engagements of their warriors,
Where both from side to side may skip,
And only encounter at bopeep. Hudibras.

There devil plays at bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety. Dryden.

- BO'RABLE. adj. [from bore.] That may be bored.

- BORACHIO. n. s. [borracho, Span.] A drunkard.

How you stink of wine! D'y^e think my an absolute borachio. Congreve.

- BO'RAGE. n. s. [from borago, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

- BO'RAMEZ. n. s. The Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

Much wonder is made of the boramez, that strange plant-animal, or vegetable lamb of Tar-tary, which wolves delight to feed on; which bath the shape of a lamb, affordeth a bloody juice upon breaking, and liveth while the plants be consumed about it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BO'RAX. n. s. [borax, low Latin.] An artificial salt, prepared from sal ammoniac, nitre, calcined tartar, sea salt, and alum, dissolved in wine. It is principally used to solder metals, and sometimes an uterine ingredient in medicine.

Quincy.

BO'RDEL. } n. s. [bordeel, Teut. bordel, BORDE'LLIO. } Armorick.] A brothel;
a bawdy-house.

From the bordello it might come as well,

The spital, or pichhatch.

Ben Jonson.

Making even his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil vice into the unwary years of his poor children.

South.

BORDER. n. s. [bord, Germ. bord, Fr.]

1. The outer part or edge of any thing.

They have looking-glasses bordered with broad borders of crystal, and great counterfeit precious stones.

Bacon.

The light must strike on the middle, and extend its greatest clearness on the principal figures; diminishing by degrees, as it comes nearer and nearer to the borders.

Dryden.

2. The much or edge of a country; the confine.

If a prince keep his residence on the border of his dominions, the remote parts will rebel; but if he make the centre his seat, he shall easily keep them in obedience.

Spenser.

3. The outer part of a garment, generally adorned with needlework, or ornaments.

4. A bank raised round a garden, and set with flowers; a narrow rank of herbs or flowers.

There he arriving, round about doth fly
From bed to bed, from one to other border;
And takes survey, with curious busy eye,
Of every flower and herb there set in order.

Spenser.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound:
Such various ways the spacious alleys lead,
My doubtful muse knows not what path to tread.

Waller.

To BO'RDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To confine upon; to touch something else at the side or edge: with upon.

It borders upon the province of Croatia, which, in time past, had continual wars with the Turks garrisons.

Knolles.

Virtue and honour had their temples borders on each other, and are sometimes both on the same coin.

Addison.

2. To approach nearly to.

All wit which borders upon profaneness, and makes bold with those things to which the greatest reverence is due, deserves to be branded with folly.

Tillotson.

To BO'RDER. v. a.

1. To adorn with a border of ornaments.

2. To reach; to touch; to confine upon; to be contiguous to.

Sheba and Raamah are those parts of Arabia, which border the sea called the Persian gulf.

Raleigh.

BO'RDERER. n. s. [from border.] He that dwells on the borders, extreme parts, or confines; he that dwells next to any place.

They of those marches, gracious sovereign!
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pillaging borderers.

Shaksp.

An ordinary horse will carry two sacks of sand; and, of such, the borderers on the road bestow sixty at least in every acre; but most husbands double that number.

Carew.

The easiest to be drawn

To our society, and to aid the war;

The rather for their seat being next borderers

On Italy; and that they abound with horse.

Ben Jonson.

The king of Scots in person, with Perkin in his company, entered with a great army, though it chiefly consisted of borderers, being raised somewhat suddenly.

Bacon.

Volga's stream

Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,

Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent,

They rend their countries.

Philips.

To BO'RDRAGE. v. n. [from border.] To plunder the borders. Not in use.

Long time in peace his realm established,

Yet oft annoy'd with sundry bordragings

Of neighbour Scots, and foreign scattellings.

Spenser.

To BORE. v. n. [borian, Sax.]

1. To pierce in a hole.

I'll believe as soon,

This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon

May through the centre creep.

Shakspere.

Mulberries will be fairer, if you bore the trunk of the tree through, and thrust, into the places bored, wedges of some hot trees.

Bacon.

But Cypys, and the graver sort, thought fit

The Greeks suspected present to commit

To seas or flames; at least, to search and bore

The sides, and what that space contains to explore.

Danbar.

2. To hollow.

Take the barrel of a long gun, perfectly bored, and set it upright, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; and then, if you suck at the mouth of the barrel never so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth.

Digby.

3. To make by piercing.

These diminutive caterpillars are able, by degrees, to pierce or bore their way into a tree, with very small holes; which, after they are fully entered, grow together.

Rey.

4. To pierce; to break through.

Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,
What riots seen, what bustling crowds I bor'd,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd.

Gay.

To BORE. v. n.

1. To make a hole.

A man may make an instrument to bore a hole an inch wide, or half an inch, not to bore a hole of a foot.

Wilkins.

2. To push forward toward a certain point.

Those milk paps,

That through the window bars bore at men's eyes,

Are not within the leaf of pity writ.

Nor southward to the raining regions run;

But boring to the west, and howling there,

With gaping mouths they draw prolific air.

Dryden.

To BORE. v. n. [with farriers.] Is when a horse carries his nose near the ground.

Diet.

BORE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The hole made by boring.

Into hollow regions long and round,

Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire

Dilated, and infuriate.

Milton.

2. The instrument with which a hole is bored.

So shall that hole be fit for the file, or square bore. Mason.

3. The size of any hole; the cavity; the hollow.

We took a cylindrical pipe of glass, whose bore was about a quarter of an inch in diameter. Boyle.

Our careful monarch stands in person by,
This new-cast cannon's firmness to explore;
The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,
And ball and cartridge sorts for every bore. Dryden.

It will best appear in the bores of wind instruments; therefore cause pipes to be made with a single, double, and so on, to a sextuple bore; and mark what tone every one giveth. Bacon.

BORE The preterit of bear.
The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul;
Yet with becoming grief he bore his part,
Resign'd his son, but not resign'd his heart. Dryden.

'T was my fate
To kill my father, and pollute his bed
By marrying her who bore me. Dryden.

BOR'EAL. a. dj. [borealis, Lat.] Northern; septentrional.
Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;
Before the boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope.

BOR'EAS. m. s. [Lat.] The north wind.
Boreas, and Cacas, and Argestas loud,
And Thracias, rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

BOR'EE. n. s. A kind of dance.
Dick could neatly dance a jig,
But Tom was best at bores. Swift.

BOR'ER. n. s. [from bore.] A piercer; an instrument to make holes with.

quial speech.

BOUND. n. s. [from bind.]

1. A limit; a boundary; that by which any thing is terminated.

Illimitable ocean! without bound, Without dimension; where length, breadth, and height,

And time, and place, are lost. Milton.

Those vast Scythian regions were separated by the natural bounds of rivers, lakes, mountains, woods, or marshes. Temple.

Indus and Ganges, our wide empire's bounds, Swell their dy'd currents with their natives walls. Dryden.

Through all th' infernal bounds,
Which flaming Phlegethon surrounds,
Sad Orpheus sought his consort lost. Pope.

2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained.

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother; who shall bar me from them?
Shakspeare.

Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,
And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores. Denham.

Any bounds made with body, even adamantine walls, are far from putting a stop to the mind, in its progress in space. Locke.

3. [from To bound, v. n.] A leap; a jump;
a spring.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud. Shakspeare.

The horses started with a sudden bound,
And flung the reins and chariot to the ground.
Addison.

Dext'rous he 'scapes the coach with nimble bounds,

Whilst ev'ry honest tongue Stop thief resounds.
Gay.

4. A rebound; the leap of something flying back by the force of the blow.

These inward disgusts are but the first bound of this ball of contention. Decay of Piety.

To BOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

sion.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief.
Shakspeare.

To BOUND. v. a. To make to bound.

If I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I would lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jackanapes, never off.
Shakspeare.

If love, ambitious, sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch?
Shakspeare.

BOUND. The pret. and part. pass. of bind.

Nay, said Pamela, none shall take that office from myself, being so much bound as I am for my education. Sidney.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound.—
—You should in all sense be much bound to him;
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Shakspeare.

The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker,
To nature none more bound. Shakspeare.
The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of horsemen, which they used to bring into the field.
Kneller.

They summoned the governor to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governor made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it; but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon.

BOUND. adj. [a word of doubtful etymology.] Destined; intending to come to any place.

His be that care, whom most it doth concern,
Said he; but whither with such hasty flight
Art thou now bound? for well might I discern Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light.
Fairy Queen.

To be bound for a port one desires extremely,
and sail to it with a fair gale, is very pleasant.

people to pass all boundaries of laws, and reverence to his authority. King Charles.

Sensation and reflection are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance.
Locke.

Great part of our sins consist in the irregularities attending the ordinary pursuits of life; so that our reformation must appear, by pursuing them within the boundaries of duty. Rogers.

BO'UNDEN. The part. pass. of bind. Not now much in use.

Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.—
—I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.
Shakspeare.

limited; unconfined; immeasurable; illimitable.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakspeare.

Heav'n has of right all victory design'd;
Whence boundless power dwells in a will confin'd.
Dryden.

Man seems as boundless in his desires, as God is in his being; and therefore nothing but God himself can satisfy him. South.

'Though we make duration boundless as it is, we cannot extend it beyond all being. God fills eternity, and it is hard to find a reason why any one should doubt that he fills immensity. Locke.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,

Or roll the planets through the boundless sky.
Pope.

BO'UNDLESSNESS. n. s. [from boundless.]

The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing. Zachariah.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou, boy;

B R A

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons. Shakespeare.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind :
The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd. Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor. Locke.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands. Pope.

TO BOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To treat
as a boy.

Anthony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness
I' th' posture of a whore. Shakespeare.

BO'YHOOD. n. s. [from boy.] The state of a boy ; the part of life in which we are boys. This is perhaps an arbitrary word.

If you should look at him, in his boyhood, through the magnifying end of a perspective,
and, in his manhood, through the other, it would be impossible to spy any difference : the same air, the same strut. Swift.

BO'YISH. adj. [from boy.]

1. Belonging to a boy.
I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,
To th' very moment that he bade me tell it. Shakespeare.

2. Childish ; trifling.

'This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms. Shakespeare.

Young men take up some English poet for their model, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling. Dryden.

BO'YISHLY. adv. [from boyish.] Childishly ; triflingly.

BO'YISHNESS. n. s. [from boyish.] Childishness ; trifling manner.

The women of China, by bracing and binding them from their infancy, have very little feet. Locke.

2. To intend ; to make tense ; to strain up.
The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced. Holder.

The diminution of the force of the pressure of the external air in bracing the fibres, must create a debility in muscular motion. Arbutnot.

B R A

BRACE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cincture ; bandage.
2. That which holds any thing tight.
The little bones of the ear-drum do in straining and relaxing it, as the braces of the war-drum do in that. Derham.

3. BRACE. [In architecture.] A piece of timber framed in with bevil joints, used to keep the building from swerving either way. Builder's Dict.

4. BRACES. [a sea term.] Ropes belonging to all the yards, except the mizen. They have a pendant to the yardarm, two braces to each yard ; and, at the end of the pendant, a block is seized, through which the rope called the brace is reeved. The braces serve to square and traverse the yards. Sea Dict.

5. BRACES of a coach. Thick straps of leather on which it hangs.

6. Harness.

7. BRACE. [In printing.] A crooked line enclosing a passage, which ought to be taken together, and not separately ; as in a triplet.

Charge Venus to command her son,
Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove ;
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love. Prior.

8. Warlike preparation : from bracing the armour ; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it ;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks th' abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.

9. Tension ; tightness.
The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

BRACE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]

1. A pair ; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and court'd around his chair. Dryden's Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportsman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty brace of pheasants. Addison.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you. Shakespeare.

BRACHY'GRAPHY. n. s. [βραχύς short, and γράφω to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the 'creed' when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny.

Glasville.

BRACK. n. s. [from break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the brack fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects.

Hayward.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools: and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece; and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout; I shall promise myself an acquiescence.

Digby.

BRA'CKET: n. s. [a term of carpentry.] A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets; being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath.

Mortimer.

BRA'CKISH. adj. [brack, Dutch.] Salt; somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand; but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again.

Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top, A lake of brackish water on the ground Was all I found.

Herbert.

The wise contriver, on his end intent, Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea. What other cause could this effect produce?

The brackish tincture through the main diffuse?

Blackmore.

BRA'CKISHNESS. n. s. [from brackish.] Saltness in a small degree.

All the artificial strainings hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses.

Cheyne.

BRAD, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Saxon brad, and the Gothick braid.

Gibson.

BRAD. n. s. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in, the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing.

Moxon.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the wars?

B R A

Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars, And wilt not come?

Shakespeare.

Mark me, with what violence the first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies.

Shakespeare.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England.

Sanderus.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment.

Arbutnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance.

Sidney.

Verona brags of him.

To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth.

Every busy little scribbler now

Swells with the praises which he gives himself;

And, taking sanctuary in the crowd,

Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend.

Rassam.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on.

Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon.

Pope.

A kind of conquest

Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag.

Of came, and saw, and overcame.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off.

Bacon.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn

In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,

Where most may wonder.

Milton.

BRAGGADO'CIO. n. s. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfairs, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggados are easy to be detected.

L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure.

Dryden.

BRA'GGARDISM. n. s. [from brag.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

BRA'GGART. adj. [from brag.] Boastful;

prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats,
where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. Ben Jonson.

BRAMBLE. n. s. [brenmlar, Sax. rubus, Lat.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry. Miller.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store.

Spenser.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrushes shrill, the bramble bush forsake. Gay.

BRAMBLING. n. s. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch. Dict.

main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?

Shakespeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole;
any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein. Shaks.

The belief of this was of special importance to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend. Hammond.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it. Rogeri.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of

between the one and the other.

Farrier's Dict.

2. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothic vaults; which arches transversing from one angle to another, diagonal wise, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals. Harris.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods,
and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Shakespeare.

The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyra-mis, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon.

Plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching plain. Mil.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood
Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood:
Fresh was the grass beneath, and ev'ry tree
At distance planted, in a due degree,
Their branching arms in air, with equal space, Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace. Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd; another views
Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.

Adison.

which we call clogging. Ray.

BROOK. n. s. [brȳc, or brȳca, Sax.] A running water, less than a river.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare.

Or many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages. Milton.
And to Cephisus' brook their way pursue:
The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew. Dryden.
Springs make little rivulets; those united,
make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea. Locke.

To BROOK. v. a. [brȳcan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they, which brook it worst that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it. Hooker.
A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learned me to brook this patiently. Shaks.
How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shakspeare.

Heav'n, the seat of bliss,
Brooks not the works of violence and war. Milt.
Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools. South.

Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard. Dryden.

To BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

The nation then too late will find, Directors promises but wind, South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.

Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide; Gany's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;

Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.

He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbutnot.

TO BU'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood, Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind, Doth rise and fall. Shakspeare.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting, Lizard's leg, and owl's wing;

For a charm of powerful trouble, Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakspeare.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat; at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward.

2. To run with a gentle noise.
For theeth the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

- To BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat: a can. word.
He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth, and has drilled him on to five and fifty. Addison.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy. Arbutnot.

- BU'BBLER. n. s. [from bubble.] A cheat.
What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubbleers! Digby to Pope.

- BU'BBY. n. s. A woman's breast.
Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much govern'd by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubbly? Arbutnot.

- BU'BO. n. s. [Lat. from bubō, the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes. Quincy.

That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water. Shak.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.

2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

The porringers that in a row
Hung hung, and made a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

- BU'CKLE. n. s. [bawcel, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]

1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch, made to fasten one thing to another.

 See as thou wast wont to see:
 Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
 Hath such force and blessed power. Shakespeare.
 Writers say, as the most forward bud
 Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
 Even so by love the young and tender wit

BUD

- Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,
 Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shaks.
 When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,
 Why do you to her garland join
 The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.
 Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liq or, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice.
Bentley.
- TO BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To put forth young shoots, or gems.
Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Eich.
 2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.
 There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out. Clarendon.
 Heav'n gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,
 Ere mortals all his beauties could survey:
 Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.
 Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,
 And felt for budding horns on their smooth fore-heads rear'd. Dryden's Silenus.
 3. To be in the bloom, or growing.

 And the gods doom him after. Shakespeare.
- BUDGET. n. s. [bogette, French.]
1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.
 If tinkers may have leave to live,
 And bear the sowskin budget;
 Then my account I well may give,
 And in the stocks avouch it. Shakespeare.
 Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.
 His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
 The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.
 2. It is used for a store, or stock.
 It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Esrange.
- BUFF. n. s. [from buffalo.]
1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.
 A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
 Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryde.

BU F

2. The skins of elks, and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.
3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.
A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shaksp.
To BUFF. v. a. [buffer, Fr.] To strike. Not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From aught but a block. Ben Jonson.

BU'FFALO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy browse
Of buffaloes, sark goats, and hungry cows. Dryd.
BUFFET. n. s. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to show, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-coloured serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.

BU'FFET. n. s. [buffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakspere.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Has ta'en with equal thanks. Shakspere.
Go, baffled coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Miln.
Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the son of Neptune, stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

To BU'FFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seemed but rameness. Shakspere.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shaksp.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews, throwing it aside. Shaksp.
Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Otway.

To BU'FFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakspere's Henry v.

BUFFO'ON. n. s. [buffon, French.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.
It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.
The bold buffoon whene'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene. Garth.

BUFFO'ONERY. n. s. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.
Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Lacke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need. Dryden.

BUG. n. s. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings. Pope.

BUG. } n. s. [It is derived by some BUG'BEAR. } from big, by others from pug; bug, in Welsh, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen: generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,

As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shakspere.

Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bug-bear take him. Shakspere.

We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Lacke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BU'GGINESS. n. s. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BU'GGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BU'GLE. } n. s. [from buzen, Sax.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name. Cronicles.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build. Shaks.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a Colossus upon putting it on. Spectator.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities. Donne.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

To BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind that builds upon it. Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon soundness of their own proceedings. Bacon.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations. Dryden.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think. Addison.

BUI'LDER. n. s. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss. Sidney.

When they which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twer meant
T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent. Denham.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame. Prior.

BUI'LDING. n. s. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shaks.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To building; rais'd by common hands:

BUL

That fabrick rises high as heav'n, Whose basis on devotion stands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings; or statues that are still extant. Addison.

BUILT. n. s. [from build.]

1. The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mountain shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.

BULB. n. s. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray.

BULBA'CEOUS. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The same as bulbous. Dict.

BULBOUS. adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth most to the air and sun. Bacon.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk. Ray.

To BULGE. v. n. [It was originally written bilge; bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilg, Saxon, a bladder.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

Thrice round the ship was tost,
Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost. Dryden.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BUL'IMY. [βουλμία, from bul, an ox, and imōs, hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities. Dict.

BULK. n. s. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man.]

1. Magnitude of material substance; mass.

Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon's War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk; but fitter for the merchant than the man of war, for burden than for battle. Raleigh.

Though an animal drives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbutnot.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison's Freeholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabrick.

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakspeare.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo.

BULK. n. s. [from bielcke, Dan. a beam.]

A part of a building jutting out.
Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home. Shakspeare.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulk, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

BULKHEAD. n. s. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BULKINESS. n. s. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

BULKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latrecus, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace. Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbutnot.

BULL. n. s. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black-cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shakspeare.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.

Best age to go to bull, or calve, we hold,
Begins at four, and ends at ten years old. May.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me; strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalms.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

4. A letter published by the pope.

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bulle; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bulle came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulle. Arbutnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was to the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope's Letters.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bulrush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. s. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison.

BULL-BEEF. n. s. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge, and their fat bull-beer. Shakspeare.

BULL-BEGGAR. n. s. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money, by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

BULL-CALF. n. s. [from bull and caif.] A he-calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakspeare.

BULL-DOG. n. s. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of them is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison.

BULL-FINCH. n. s. [rubicilla.] A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth. Phillips.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch answers from the grove. Thomson.

BULL-FLY. } n. s. An insect. Phillips.

BULL-BEE. } n. s. [from bull and bead.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. A fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of the tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Waller.

3. A little black water vermin. Phillips.

BUL

BULL-TROUT. n. s. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in those southern parts. Walton.

BULL-WORT. n. s. The same with bishops-weed.

BU'LLACE. n. s. A wild sour plum.

In October, and the beginning of November, come servises, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holyoaks, and such like. Bacon.

BU'LLET. n. s. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine, wrought in deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,

With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.

Spenser.
Gaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knolles.

And as the bullet, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

BU'LLION. n. s. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

A second multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the massy ore, Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion
dross. Milton.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addis.

BULL'ITION. n. s. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

BU'LLOCK. n. s. [from bull.] A young bull. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakspeare.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock
scorns

Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Cowley.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BU'LLY. n. s. [Skinner derives this word from bully, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally, taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter!—What says my bully rook? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakspeare.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles.

L'Estrange.

'T is so ridiculous, but so true withal;
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden.
A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addis.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison.

To BU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors, meet;
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King.

To BU'LLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BU'LRUSH. n. s. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty; confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within, of reeds a trembling wood. Dryd.

BU'LWARK. n. s. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser.

They oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addis.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolish'd upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakspeare.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.

BUM. n. s. [bomme, Dutch.] The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me;
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakspeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and relics of the bum. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W—n.

BUMBA'ILIFF. n. s. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption boun, bun, bum bailiff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests,

BUM

Go, sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakspeare.
BU'MBARD. n. s. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.
 Yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakspeare.

BU'MBAST. n. s. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and sein, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Steevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have receiv'd your letters full of love, And, in our maiden council, rated them As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakspeare.

BUMP. n. s. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakspeare.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head, And as a bitour bumps within a reed, To thee alone, O lake, she said— Dryden.

BU'MPER. n. s. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brim.

Places his delight All day in playing bumpers, and at night Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

BU'MPKIN. n. s. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumpkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used among us for a knob, or lump: may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition. L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care, Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears: The country bumpkin the same liv'ry wears. Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. Locke.

BU'MPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustic wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUN

BUNCH. n. s. [buncker, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.
 They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them. Isaiab.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard, with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing. Shak.
 Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryd.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine, And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.
 And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Queen.

BUNDLE. n. s. [byñble, Saxon, from byñd.]

1. A number of things bound together.

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break;— Then bids the youngest of the six Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.
 She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overladen, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle. Spectator.

To BU'NDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together as well as we can, doctrine canon; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frise;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. s. [bing, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung-stick, or plug. Adfortimer.
To BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BU'NGHOLE. n. s. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterwards stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noblest dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole? Shakspeare.

To BUNGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly: with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms, being fetcht

From glistering semblances of piety. Shakspeare.
They make lame mischief, though they mean it well:

Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dryden.

BU'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errors and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty shews a master's hand. Dryden.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. s. [bumelo, Span.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear,
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and sugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay.

BUNT. n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent.] A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt, or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carraw.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out: as, the sail bunts out.

BU'NTER. n. s. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach, Appear like mice: and yond tall anchoring bark Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy, Almost too small for sight. Shakspeare.

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope.

To BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. The s is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. King Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Natural History.

To BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specific lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope.

BUO'YANCY. n. s. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUO'YANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more Inspire the course. Thomson's Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Saxon, bur, an inner chamber, or place of shade and retirement. Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. s. [lappa: bourre, Fr. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing seems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose;

Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent. Shakspeare.

BUR

Dependents and suitors are always the burrs, and sometimes the briars, of favourites. Wotton.

Whither betake her
From the chill dew, amongst rude burrs and chistles. Milton.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burrs and thorns disgrace the ground.
Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off. Arbutnot.

BU'R BOT. n. s. A fish full of prickles. Dict.

BU'R DELAIS. n. s. A sort of grape.

BU'R DEN. n. s. [byrden, Saxon, and therefore properly written burtben. It chyle. Floyer.

BU'XOM. adj. [bucrum, Sax. from buxan, to bend. It originally signified obedient; as John de Trevisa, a clergyman, tells his patron, that he is obedient and buxom to all his commands. In an old form of marriage, used before the reformation, the bride promised to be obedient and buxom in bed and at board; from which expression, not well understood, its present meaning seems to be derived.]

1. Obedient; obsequious.

He did tread down and disgrace all the English, and set up and countenance the Irish;
thinking thereby to make them more tractable and buxom to his government. Spenser.

Come from marble bow'rs, many times the gay harbour of anguish, Unto a silly cabin, though weak, yet stronger against woes. Sidney.

Neither should that odious custom be allow'd, of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, and make up their ditches. Swift.

4. A tent, or temporary habitation.

Some of green boughs their slender cabin frame,

Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about. Fairf.

To CA'BIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave. Shakspeare.

To CA'BIN. v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd ; I had else been perfect,
As broad and general as the casing air ;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear. Shakspeare.

CA'BINED. adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

CABINET. n. s. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A closet ; a small room.

At both corners of the farther side, let there be two delicate or rich cabined, daintily paved, richly hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegancy that may be thought on. Bacon.

2. A hut or small house.

Hearken awhile in thy green cabinet,
The laurel song of careful Colinet. Spenser.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.

You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practised in the camp. Dryden.

4. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities ; a private box.

Who sees a soul in such a body set,
Might love the treasure for the cabinet. B. Jon.
In vain the workman shew'd his wit,
With rings and hinges counterfeit,
To make it seem, in this disguise,
A cabinet of vulgar eyes. Swift.

5. Any place in which things of value are hidden.

Thy breast hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my secrets. Denham.

We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty ; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mysteries. Taylor.

CABINET-COUNCIL. n. s.

1. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon.

2. A select number of privy counsellors supposed to be particularly trusted.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read ; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay to Swift.

CABINET-MAKER. n. s. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes small nice drawers or boxes.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs ; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

CABLE. n. s. [cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dutch.]

The great rope of a ship, to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown over-board,

The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood;
Yet lives our pilot still. Shakespeare.

The length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Ruligh.

The cables crack; the sailors fearful cries
Ascend; and sable night involves the skies.

CABURNS. n. s. Small ropes used in ships.

CACAO. See CHOCOLATE.

CACHECTICAL. } adj. [from cachexy.]
CACHECTICK. } Having an ill habit of body; showing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than rapid and cachectical. Arbutnot on Air.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood of some persons who are cachectick. Floyer.

CACHEXY. n. s. [καχξία.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms: most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions; proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe acute distempers. Arbutnot.

CACHINNA'TION. n. s. [cachinnatio, Lat.]

A loud laughter. Dict.

CACKEREL. n. s. A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

To CACKLE. v. n. [kaeckelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a noise as a goose.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shaks.

Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,
And save the state, by cackling to the Tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,

This woeful cackling cry with horror heard
Of those distracted damsels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.

Nic grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and fell a frisking and dancing about the room. Arbutnot.

4. To talk idly; to prattle.

CACKLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a goose or fowl.

The silver goose before the shining gate
There flew, and by her cackle sav'd the state. Dryden.

2. Idle talk; prattle.

CACKLER. n. s. [from cackle.]

1. A fowl that cackles.

2. A telltale; a tatter.

CACOCY'MICAL. } adj. [from carocy- CACOCY'MICK. } my.] Having the humours corrupted.

VOL. I.

C A D

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative.

Harvey on Consumptions.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wiseman.

The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, choler, melancholy, and pulegm; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Floyer on the Humours.

CACOCY'MY. n. s. [κακοχυσμία.]

A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacoclym. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an organism. Harvey.

CACOPHONY. n. s. [κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar, trip-lets, and cacophonies of all kinds. Pope to Swift.

To CACUMINATE. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.]

To make sharp or pyramidal. Dict.

CADA'VEROUS. adj. [cadaver, Lat.]

Having the appearance of a dead carcass; having the qualities of a dead carcass.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who living are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, foetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons. Arbut.

CAD'DIS. n. s. [This word is used in Erse for the variegated clothes of the Highlanders.]

1. A kind of tape or riband.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inks, caddises, cambricks, lawns; why, he sings them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakespeare.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw.

He loves the mayfly, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis, and these make the trout bold and lusty. Walton's Angler.

CADE. adj. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame; soft; delicate; as, a cade Lamb, a lamb bred at home.

To CADE. v. a. [from the adj.] To breed up in softness.

CADUS. n. s. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.—Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shakespeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd hurks is ficed, thou must refrain
Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cadus. Philips.

CADE-WORM. n. s. The same with caddis.

CAD'ENCE. } n. s. [cadence, Fr.]
CAD'ENCY. }

1. Fall; state of sinking; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
 From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
 To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.

2. The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call præter expectatam; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived. Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs,
 Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!
 Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatic and epic poetry. Dryden.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain
 The sound of blust'ring winds, which all night long Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Milton.

He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

5. [In horsemanship.] An equal measure or proportion which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed. Farrier's Dict.

CAD'ENT. adj. [cadens, Lat.] Falling down.

CAD'E'T. n. s. [cadet, Fr. pronounced cadè.]

1. The younger brother.

2. The youngest brother.

Joseph was the youngest of the twelve, and David the eleventh son, and the cadet of Jesse. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. A volunteer in the army, who serves in expectation of a commission.

CAD'EW. n. s. A straw worm. See CAD-DIS. Dict.

CAD'GER. n. s. [from cadge, or cage, a panier.] A huckster; one who brings butter, eggs, and poultry, from the country to market.

CAD'I. n. s. A magistrate among the Turks, whose office seems nearly to answer to that of a justice of peace.

CADI'LLACK. n. s. A sort of pear.

CÆCIAS. n. s. [Lat.] A wind from the northeast.

Now, from the north,
 Boreas and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
 And Thracias, rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

CÆSAREAN. See CESARIAN.

CÆSURA. n. s. [Lat.] A figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

CÆFTAN. n. s. [Persick.] A Persian or Turkish vest or garment.

CAG. n. s. A barrel, or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons. Sometimes hcg.

CAGE. n. s. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An enclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,

They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
 Homers again and Pindars may be found,
 And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,
 And singing birds in silver cages hung;
 And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
 Were sort'd well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment; a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watts on the Mind.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, enclosed with palisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose in a cage.

He, swoln and pamper'd with high fare,
 Sits down, and snorts, cag'd in his basket-chair. Denn.

CAYMAN. n. s. The American name of a crocodile.

To CAJOLE. v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] To flatter; to soothe; to coax: a low word.

Thought he, 't is no mean part of civil State prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras.

Tha one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him: takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, claps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests. L'Étranger.

My tongue that wanted to cajole
 I try'd, but not a word would troll. Rymer.

CAJO'LER. n. s. [from cajole.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJO'LERY. n. s. [cajolerie, Fr.] Flattery.

CAISSON. n. s. [French.]

1. A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.

2. A wooden case in which the piers of bridges are built within the water.

CAI'TIFF. n. s. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

ἥμισυ τῆς ἀρετῆς; ἀποκινῆσαι δόλον καὶ ἥμισυ. Hom.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile cattiff! vassal of dread and despair,
 Unworthy of the common breathed air!
 Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
 And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Spens.

'T is not impossible
 But one, the wicked'st cattiff on the ground,

May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo. Shakspeare.

The wretched catiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. s. [cuch, Teutonic.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings! do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shaks.
My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,
Out of hope of all but my share of the feast.
Shakspeare.

The dismal day was come; the priests prepare
Their heaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair.
Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large, and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.
Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood. Dryden.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely,
had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs.
Shakspeare.

He rins'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood
That cad'd within. Addison.

CALABA'SH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup issues the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMA'NCO. n. s. [a word derived, probably by some accident, from cala- manicus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary; had a red coat, flung open, to show a cala- manco waistcoat. Tutler.

CA'LAMINE, or Lapis Calaminaris. n. s.
A kind of fossil bituminous earth, which,
being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz.
loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CA'LAMINT. n. s. [calamintba, Lat.] A plant.

CALAMITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy;
wretched: applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calami- titous; the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful: applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague. Harvey.

Strict necessity
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all Devolv'd. Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressour would have even revived them. South.

CALAMITOUSNESS. n. s. [from calami- tous.] Misery; distress.

CALAMITY. n. s. [calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.
Another ill accident is drought, and the spin-dling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

2. Misery; distress.
This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound.
Milton.

From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and distant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear.
Prior.

CA'LAMUS. n. s. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies.
The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus.

CALA'SH. n. s. [caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to flash
The vig'rous steeds, that drew his lord's calash.
King.

The ancients used calashes, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arbutnot.

CA'LTEATED. adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod;
fitted with shoes.

CALCEDON'NIUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple.
Woodward on Fossils.

To CA'LCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath three degrees; first, it induratheth, then maketh fragile, and lastly it doth calcinate. Bacon.

CALCINA'TION. n. s. [from calcine; calci- nation, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtile particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yieldeth them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtile powder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCINATORY. n. s. [from calcinate.] A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCINE. v. a. [calcinor, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbutnot.

2. To burn up.

Fiery disputes that union have calcin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton.

To CALCULATE. v. a. [calculer, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I should die. Shaks.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance?
Shakspeare.

Who were there then in the world, to observe The births of those first men, and calculate their Nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches?
Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears,
as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

To CALCULATE. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULATION. n. s. [from calculate.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true, for so they reckon. Hooker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCULATOR. n. s. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CALCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CALCULE. n. s. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute. Obsolete.

The general calcule, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

CALCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.]
CALCULOUS. } Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculous concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculous person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharrp.

CALCULUS. n. s. [Lat.] The stone in the bladder.

CA'LDRON. n. s. [chaudron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all

There placed was a caldron wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Q.

Some strip the skin; some portion out the spoil;
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons' boil;
Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryd.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain.

Addison.

CALECHE. The same with calash.

CALEFACTION. n. s. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

CALEFACTIVE. } adj. [from calefacio,
CALEFACTORY. } Lat.] That makes any thing hot; heating.

To CALEFY. v. n. [calefo, Lat.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown.

To CA'LEFY. v. a. To make hot.

CA'LENDAR. n. s. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,

That it in golden letter should be set,
Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shaks.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,
Lest it pollute the month! Dryden.

To CA'LENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CA'LENDER. n. s. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in which clothers smooth their cloth.

CA'LENDER. n. s. [from calender.] The person who calenders.

CA'LEND. n. s. [calendæ, Lat.] It has no singular.] The first day of every month among the Romans.

CA'LENTURE. n. s. [from caleo, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture sees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees:
With eager haste he longs to rove
In that fantastic scene, and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove;
And in he leaps, and down he sinks.

CA'LF. n. s. calves in the plural. [cealf; Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.
The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf.
Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time.

Ah, Blouselind! I love thee more by half
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a human being, a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,
That after proves an idiot;
When folk perceive it thriveth not,
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says, that the fairy left the calf,
And took away the other.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calf into a gouty small.
The calf of that leg blistered.

CA'LIBER. n. s. [calibre, Fr.] The bore; the diameter of the barrel of a gun; the diameter of a bullet.

CA'LICE. n. s. [calix, Lat.] A cup; a chalice.

There is a natural analogy between the ablation of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred calice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ.

CA'LICO. n. s. [from Calcut in India.] An Indian stuff made of cotton; sometimes stained with gay and beautiful colours.

I wear the hoop petticoat, and am all in calicoes, when the finest are in silks.

CA'LID. adj. [calidus, Lat.] Hot; burning; fervent.

CALIDITY. n. s. [from calid.] Heat.

Ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire, it will colliquate in water, or warm oil; nor doth it only submit into an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters.

CA'LIF. } n. s. [khalifa, Arab.] an heir
CA'LIPH. } or successor.] A title assumed by the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, who were vested with absolute power in affairs both religious and civil.

CALIGA'TION. n. s. [from caligo, Lat. to be dark.] Darkness; cloudiness.

Instead of a diminution, or imperfect vision, in the mole, we affirm an abolition, or total privation; instead of caligation, or dimness, we conclude a cecity, or blindness.

CAL'IGINOUS. adj. [caliginosus, Lat.] Obscure; dim; full of darkness.

CAL'IGINOUSNESS. n. s. [from caliginosus.] Darkness; obscurity.

CA'LIGRAPHY. n. s. [καλλιγραφία.] Beautiful writing.

This language is incapable of caligraphy.

CA'LIPERS. See CALLIPERS.

CA'LIVER. n. s. [from caliber.] A handgun; a harquebuse; an old musket.

Come, manage me your caliver.

CAL'IX. n. s. [Latin.] A cup; a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

To CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from cæle, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;

Their left hand does the calking iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift.

CA'LKER. n. s. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize.

CA'LKING. n. s. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall.

To CALL. v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish.]

1. To name; to denominate.
And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. It is often used with local particles, as up, down, in, out, off.

Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend my reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?

*Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,
To slay the innocent?* Shakespeare's Richard III.
Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up, and told by his servants that the general was sick. Kneller's History.

Or call up him that left half told
The story of Cambuscan bold. Milton.
Drunkenness call: off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Taylor's Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of. Duppa.

Such fine employments our whole days divide;
The salutations of the morning tide
Call up the sun; those ended, to the hall
We wait the patron, hear the lawyers brawl. Dryden.

Then by consent abstain from further spoils,
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addis.
By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy,
I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh?
My father's name brings tears into my eyes. Addison.

I am called off from public dissertations, by a domestic affair of great importance. Tatler.

Æschylus has a tragedy intitled Persæ, in which the shade of Darius is called up. Broomer.

The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them. Watts.

3. To convoke; to summon together.
Now call we our high court of parliament.

The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately. Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.
The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth,
you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.
In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety, or to summon into the church.

Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Romans.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.
I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Cor.

8. To appeal to.
When that lord perplexed their councils and designs with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod
the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish.
Nor ballad-inger, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud;
Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,
And call: forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.
See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.
He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers, and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah.

13. To call for. To demand; to require;
to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shakespeare

You see how men of merit are sought after;
the undeserved may sleep, when the mind of action is called for. Shakespeare

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer. Milton.

For master, or for servant, here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.

He commits every sin that his appetite call for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addis.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

The heat is past, follow no farther now;
Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland. Shakespeare

He fears my subjects loyalty,
And now must call in strangers. Denham.

17. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sovereign's quarrel calls 'em out,
His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden.

TO CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying.
This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous, by in.

2. To make a short visit.

And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus.
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben Jonson

He ordered her to call at his house once a-week, which she did for some time after, when he heard no more of her. Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's.
Addison's Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his day;
what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me? Shakspeare's Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.
Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,

And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broome on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.
Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms.

CALL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation.

But death comes not at call, justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace for pray'rs or cries.
Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forests soon should dance again:
The moving mountains hear the powerful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall.
Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and public.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence, of a number of mean persons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere.
Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call.
Roscommon.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryd.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh, sir! I wish he were within my call, or yours. Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity;
and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever. Addison.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented.
Wilkins' Mathematical Magick.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now through the land his cure of souls he stretch'd,

And like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.
Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon.

CA'LLAT. } n. s. A trull.

CA'LLET. }

He call'd her whore; a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.
Shakspeare.

CA'LLING. n. s. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superior must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your callings have made themselves ridiculous
by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of con-tinence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Peter.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Hakewill on Providence.

CA'LLIPERS. n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, enclosed, or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body; so that when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon.

CALLO'SITY. n. s. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous.

Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses; or as they harden, and produce callosities: in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last hurtful. Arbutnot on Diet.

CA'LLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wisem.

2. Hardened in mind; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Estrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep;

Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,
He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryd.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. s. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching,
the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul? Bentley.

CALLOW. adj. Unledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent airy does repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryd.
How in small flights they know to try their young,

And teach the callow child her parent's song. Prior.

CALLUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.
2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous: applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the trembling
air

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did soft play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us. Jonab.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,

Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot

Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denb.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find;
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards:
since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy, in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms, within our breasts. Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,

The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. s. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.
In nature, things move violently to their place,
and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
From on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denb.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. s. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.
While the steep horrid roughness of the wood Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denb.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 't is fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all 's in anger. Shak.

I beg the grace,
You would lay by those terrors of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the sted,
Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an heavy hill. Fairy Queen.

ground, one of them points upright, to wound horses feet.

The ground about was thick sown with caltrops, which very much incommoded the soldiers.
Moors. Dr. Addison's Account of Tangier.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome ; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus.

Miller.

To CALVE. v. n. [from calf.]

1. To bring a calf : spoken of a cow.

When she has calv'd, then set the dam aside, And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth ; and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians ; as they are, Though in Rome litter'd : not Romans ; as they are not,

Though calv'd in the porch o' th' capitol. Shaks.
The grassy clods now calv'd ; now half appear'd

The tawny lion, pawing to get free

His hinder parts.

Milton.

CALVES-SNOUT. [antirrhinum.] A plant ; snapdragon.

CALVILLE. n. s. [French.] A sort of apple.

To CALUMNIATE. v. n. [calumnior, Lat.]

To accuse falsely ; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service, Love, friendship, charity, are subject all To envious and calumniating time. Shakspeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

Do I calumniate ? thou ungrateful Vanoc !—
Perfidious prince !—Is it a calumny
To say that Gwendolen, betroth'd to Yver,
Was by her father first assur'd to Valens ?

A. Philips.

To CALUMNIATE. v. a. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain, and calumniate another. Spratt.

CALUMNIA'TION. n. s. [from calumniate.]

That which we call calumination, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose. Ayliffe.

CALUMNIA'TOR. n. s. [from calumniate.]

A forger of accusation ; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot. L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators. Addison.

CALUMNIOUS. adj. [from calumny.] Slanderous ; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. Shakspeare.

With calumnious art

Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears. Milton.

CALUMNY. n. s. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander ; false charge ; groundless accusation ; with against, or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,
Thou shalt not escape calumny. Shakspeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX. n. s. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire ; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby.

CA'LYCLE. n. s. [calculus, Lat.] A small bud of a plant. Dict.

CAMA'TEU. n. s. [from camachua ; which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour.]

CA'NEL. n. s. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries.

One sort are large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon their backs. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind are leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness ; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking ; and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desert ! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast. Thomson.

CAME'LOPARD. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa. Trevoux.

CAMELOT. } n. s. [from camel.]
CAMLET. }

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; inasmuch as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Hair cloth.

Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards, And eases of their hair the loaden herds: Their camelots warm in tents the soldier hold, And shield the shivering mariner from cold.

Dryden.

One tree, the coco, affordeth stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

TO CAN. v. n. [konnen, Dutch.] It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood: as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is, not to will; the second, not to can. Bacon.

O, there's the wonder!

Mecenas and Agrippa, who can most With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspires. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If she can make me blest! She only can:
Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryd.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me: but in poetry they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

CA'NDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE. n. s. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walkingstaves are made; a walkingstaff.

Shall I, to please another wine sprung mind,
Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure

Short of his cane and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow. Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish inego de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sitt'st, to praise or to arraign
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

CA'NKER. n. s. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Shewer.

That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten. Jonh.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells, so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakespeare.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing, coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him. Orney.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty. Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.

No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort:
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dogrose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacham.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contemn'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound.
By making many. Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shakespeare.

To CA'NKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt; implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Q.

I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shak.

Or what the cross dire looking planet smites,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite.

Milton.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue! fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne.

Dryden.

Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day or secret night.

Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable.

Bacon.

TO CA'NKER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithes and tithes:
A tithe purloin'd cankers the whole estate.

Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, than is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and extortion.

Addison.

Dict.

CA'NNIBAL. n. s. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain.

Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows.

Davies on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak

Of the cannibals that each other eat;

The anthropophagi.

Shakspeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;
And spent at last, and speechless, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.

Grawville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest?

Bentley.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotcht him and notcht him like a corboudo.

—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too.

Shakspeare.

Mortimer.

CA'NNON. n. s. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.

2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe.

Shak.

He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison.

Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly.

Wilkins.

CANNON-BALL. } n. s. [from cannon, CANNON-BULLET. } ball, bullet, and
CANNON-SHOT. } shot.] The balls which are shot from great guns.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes, of one piece of timber.

Arbutnot on Coins.

CA'NON. n. s. [νόμος.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no.

Hooker.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by.

Hooker.

Religious canons, civil laws, are cruel;

Then what should war be?

Shakspeare.

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined.

Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church.

Aylmer.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingsfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon! that's a place too mean:

No, doctor, you shall be a dean;

Two dozen canons round your stall,

And you the tyrant o'er them all. Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among surgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. Dict.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written canon.

- CANON BIT. n. s. That part of the bit let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair

His stubborn steed with canon bit,

Who under him did trample as the air. Spenser.

- CANONESS. n. s. [canonissa, low Lat.]

There are, in popish countries, women they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons. Ayliffe.

- CANONICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Raleigh.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

- CANONICALLY. adv. [from canonical.]

In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bid his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it. Government of the Tongue.

- CANONICALNESS. n. s. [from canonical.]

The quality of being canonical.

- CANONIST. n. s. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth [canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Camden's Remains.]

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

- CANONIZATION. n. s. [from canonize.]

The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations. Addison.

- To CANONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry vi. for a saint. Bacon.

By those hymns all shall approve

Us canoniz'd for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingsfleet.

- CANONRY. } n. s. [from canon.] An

CANONSHIP. } ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it. Ayliffe.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

- CANOPIE. n. s. [canopeum, low Lat.]

A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,

And placed under a stately canopy,

The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,

And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate

With golden canopies, and beds of state. Dryden.

- To CANOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,

Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display

To canopy the place. Dryden.

- CANOROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Mus-sical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

- CANT. n. s. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A particular form of speaking, peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the sant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion.

Addison's Freeholder.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

Swift's Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable critick.

Addison's Spectator.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, 'in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want,
And preaching in the self-denying cant. Dryden.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

- To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions; or in any kind of formal affected language; or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry. Glanville.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderson.

The busy, subtle, serpents of the law,
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracle that canting tribe. Roscom.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go. Dryd.

- CANTATA. n. s. [Ital.] A song.

- CANTATION. n. s. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

- CANTER. n. s. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

- CANTHARIDES. n. s. [Latin.] Spanish flies, used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig-tree, the pine-tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and abstersive. Bacon's Natural History.

- CANTUHS. n. s. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser, canthus.

Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye.

Wise man.

Sprag. Kal. Gl.

- CA'NTLE. n. s. [kant, Dutch, a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners. Skinner.

See how this river comes, me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge half moon, a monstrous cantle, out. Shak.

- To CANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack.

Dryden's Jovenal.

- CA'NTIET. n. s. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield nor armour can their force oppose;
Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,
And no defence in his bor'd arms is found. Dryd.

- CA'NTO. n. s. [Ital.] A book or section of a poem.

Why, what would you do? —

—Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantos of contemned love. Shak.

- CANTON. n. s.

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Dowin.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon's Holy War.

- To CA'NTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world cantoned out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories cantoned out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual word, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness. Watt.

- To CA'NTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantoned among ten persons of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantoned amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights. Huot.

- CA'NTRED. n. s. The same in Wales as a hundred in England. For cantre, in the British language, signifieth a hundred.

Cowell.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns. Davies.

CANVASS. n. s. [canevas, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvasses they could, and fly homeward. Sid.

And eke the pens, that did his pinions bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd.

Spenser.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And build a city in an hour's space. Fairfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all, she brings.

Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,

And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;
Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright,

Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryd.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vied

With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting. [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well; so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon.

TO CANVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine. [from canvass, a straining cloth.]

I had made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence.

Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it; they canvassed the matter one way and t' other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

TO CANVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being, by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lanthorn seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting, for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called suzony.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly oc-curent both in the life and conditions of private men. Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Holker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury.

CARE. n. s. [cape, Saxon.]

1. Solitude; anxiety; perturbation of mind; concern.

Or, if I would take care, that care should be
For wit that scorn'd the world, and liv'd like me. Dryden.

Nor sullen discontent, nor anxious care,
Ev'n though brought thither, could inhibit there. Dryden.

Raise in your soul the greatest care of fulfilling the divine will. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Caution; often in the phrase, to have a care.

Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shakspere.

The foolish virgins had taken no care for a further supply, after the oil, which was at first put into their lamps, was spent, as the wise had done. Tillotson.

Begone! the priest expects you at the altar.—
But, tyrant, have a care, I come not thither. A. Philippi.

3. Regard; charge; heed in order to protection and preservation.

If we believe that there is a God, that takes care of us, and we be careful to please him, this cannot but be a mighty comfort to us. Tillotson.

4. It is a loose and vague word, implying attention or inclination, in any degree more or less: It is commonly used in the phrase, to take care.

You come in such a time,
As if propitious fortune took a care
To swell my tide of joys to their full height. Dryden.

We take care to flatter ourselves with imaginary scenes and prospects of future happiness. Alford.

5. The object of care, of caution, or of love.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care? Shaksp.

Flush'd were his cheeks, and glowing were his eyes:—
Is she thy care? is she thy care? he cries. Dryden.

C A R

Your safety, more than mine, was then my care:
 Best of the guide bereft, the rudder lost,
 Your ship should run against the rocky coast.
Dryden.

The wily fox,
 Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay.
 None taught the trees a nobler race to bear,
 Or more improv'd the vegetable care. Pope.

To CARE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be anxious or solicitous; to be in concern about any thing.

She cared not what pain she put her body to, since the better part, her mind, was laid under so much agony. Sidney.

As the Germans, both in language and manners, differed from the Hungarians, so were they always at variance with them; and therefore much cared not, though they were by him subdued. Kneller's History of the Turks.

Well, on my terms thou wilt not be my heir;
 If thou car'st little, less shall be my care. Dryden.

2. To be inclined; to be disposed: with for before nouns, or to before verbs.

Not caring to observe the wind,
 Or the new sea explore. Waller.

The remarks are introduced by a compliment to the works of an author, who, I am sure, would not care for being praised at the expense of another's reputation. Addison.

Having been now acquainted, the two sexes did not care to part. Addison.

Great masters in painting never care for drawing people in the fashion. Spectator.

3. To be affected with; to have regard to: with for.

You doat on her that cares not for your love.
Shakespeare.

There was an ape that had twins; she doated upon one of them, and did not much care for the other. L'Estrange.

Where few are rich, few care for it; where many are so, many desire it. Temple.

CA'RECRAZED. adj. [from care and craze.] Broken with care and solicitude.

2. A course; a race.

What rein can hold licentious wickedness,
 When down the hill he holds his fierce career?
Shakespeare.

3. Height of speed; swift motion.

It is related of certain Indians, that they are able, when a horse is running in his full career, to stand upright on his back. Wilkins.

Practise them now to curb the turning steed,
 Mocking the foe; now to his rapid speed
 To give the rein, and, in the full career,
 To draw the certain sword, or send the pointed spear. Prior.

4. Course of action; uninterrupted procedure.

Shall quips and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? Shakespeare.

C A R

The heir of a blasted family has rose up, and promised fair, and yet at length, a cross event has certainly met and stop't him in the career of his fortune. South.

Knights in knightly deeds should persevere,
 And still continue what at first they were;
 Continue, and proceed in honour's fair career.
Dryden.

To CARE'ER. v. n. [from the noun.] To run with swift motion.

With eyes, the wheels
 Of beryl, and careering fires between. Milton.

CA'RELESSNESS. n. s. [from careless.]

Heedlessness; inattention; negligence;
 absence of care; manner void of care.

For Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see it. Shakespeare.

Who, in the other extreme, only doth
 Call a rough carelessness good fashion;

Whose cloak his spurs tear, or whom he spits on,
 He cares not. Dunne.

It makes us to walk warily, and tread sure, for fear of our enemies; and that is better than to be flattered into pride and carelessness. Taylor.

The ignorance or carelessness of the servants can hardly leave the master disappointed. Temple.

I who at some times spend, at others spare, Divided between carelessness and care. Pope.

executions, a case of compassion. Pope.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as between man and beast, or between soul and body, it in-vesteth a right of government; which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence. Bacon.

Here was the case; an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour. Bacon.

I can but be a slave wherever I am; so that taken or not taken, 't is all a case to me.

L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends;
he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel. Taylor's Holy Living.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have fewer ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind.

Swift.

3. [In physick.] State of the body; state of the disease.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case. Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. History of a disease.

5. State of a legal question.

If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases: so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. Bacon.

6. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness or fat. In case is, lusty or fat.

Thou lyest, most ignorant monster, I am in case to juggle a constable. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you. L'Estrange.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were in case for action, now be here. Hudibras.

For if the sire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copy'd in his famish'd race. Dryd.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;
Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen. Swift.

7. Contingence; possible event.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever. Tillot.

8 Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case. Sidney.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies. Tillotson.

9. Representation of any fact or question.

10. The variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension.

Clarke's Lat. Grammar.

11. In case. [in caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For in case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew us where we shall find it; that we may say these were the orders of the apostles.

Hooker.

A sure retreat to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field.

Bacon's Henry vii.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Hayward.

To CASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Case ye, case ye; on with your visours; there 's money of the king's coming down the hill.

Shakespeare's Henry iv.

The cry went once for thee;
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in a tent. Shakespeare.

Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,
Case'd in green scales, the crocodile extends.

Thomson.

2. To cover as a case.

Then comes my fit again; I had else been perfect,

As broad and gen'ral as the casings air. Shaks.

3. To cover on the outside with materials different from the inside.

Then they began to case their houses with marble. Arbutnot.

4. To strip off the covering; to take off the skin.

We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him. Shakespeare.

To CASE, v. n. To put cases; to contrive representations of facts: a ludicrous use.

They fell presently to reasoning and casings upon the matter with him, and laying distinctions before him. L'Estrange.

To CASEHARDEN. v. a. [from case and harden.] To harden on the outside.

The manner of casehardening is thus: Take cow-horn or hoof, dry it thoroughly in an oven, then beat it to powder; put about the same quantity of bay salt to it, and mingle them together, with stale chamberlye, or else white wine vinegar. Lay some of this mixture upon loam, and cover your iron all over with it; then wrap the loam about all, and lay it upon the hearth of the forge to dry and harden. Put it into the fire, and blow up the coals to it, till the whole lump have just a blood-red heat.

Moxon's Mechan. Exercises.

made to separate the platforms of the lower and upper batteries.]

1. [In fortification.] A kind of vault or arch of stone work, in that part of the flank of a bastion next the curtain, somewhat retired or drawn back towards the capital of the bastion, serving as a battery to defend the face of the opposite bastion, and the moat or ditch.

Chambers.

2. The well, with its several subterraneous branches, dug in the passage of the bastion, till the miner is heard at work, and air given to the mine. Harris.

CAS'EMENT. n. s. [casamento, Ital.] A window opening upon hinges.

Why, then may you have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

Here in this world they do much knowledge read,

And are the casements which admit most light.

Davies.

They, waken'd with the noise, did fly
From inward room to window eye,
And gently op'ning lid, the casement,
Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.

Hudibras.

There is as much difference between the clear representations of the understanding then, and the obscure discoveries that it makes now, as there is between the prospect of a casement and a key-hole. South.

CAS'EUS. adj. [caseus, Lat.] Resembling cheese; cheesy.

Its fibrous parts are from the caseous parts of the chyle. Floyer on the Humours.

CASH'ER. n. s. [from cash.] He that has charge of the money.

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle.

South.

A Venetian, finding his son's expences grow very high, ordered his cashier to let him have no more money than what he should count when he received it. Locke.

Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses, while the muse is kind.

Pope.

To CASH'ER. v. a. [casser, French; casare, Latin.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio.

Shakespeare.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashiered. Baron.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.

They have already cashiered several of their followers as mutineers. Addison's Freeholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd, contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd. Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate: which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious.

Locke.

CASK. n. s. [casque, French; cadus, Latin.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask. Harvey.

Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine;
Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'er-grown,

The good old cask for ever keeps unknown.

Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniencies grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away. Raleigh.

CASK. } n. s. [casque, Fr. cassis, Lat.]

CASQUE. } A helmet; armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakespeare.

And these

Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light.

Dryden.

Why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask
His wrinkled brows? Addison.

CASKET. n. s. [a diminutive of caisse, a chest, Fr. casse, cassette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets;
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakespeare.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou hear
Lock'd up within the casket of thy breast!

What jewels and what riches hast thou there!
What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest!

Davies.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casket of heav'n's richest store.

Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure

In one dear casket, and sav'd only that. Orway.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

CA'SSAVI. } n. s. A plant.
CA'SSADA. }

It is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts.
The most common has purplish stalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplish colour; but the stalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The last sort is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice;
which the negroes frequently dig up, roast, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects.

Miller.

CA'SSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CA'SSIA. n. s. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Ex. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. This aromatick is said to be the bark of a tree very like cinnamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated. Calmet.

All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia. Psalms.

CA'SSIA. n. s. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by transverse diaphragms;
in each of which is contained one hard seed,

Bacon's Natural History.

The casting of the skin is, by the ancients, compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for that were to make every casting of the skin a new birth: and besides, the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is shaped according to the parts. The creatures that cast the skin, are the snake, the viper, the grasshopper, the lizard, the silkworm, &c.

Bacon.

O fertile head, which ev'ry year
Could such a crop of wonders bear!
Which might it never have been cast,
Each year's growth added to the last,
These lofty branches had supply'd
The earth's bold sons prodigious pride.

Waller.

The waving harvest bends beneath his blast,
The forest shakes, the groves their honours cast.

Dryden.

From hence, my lord and love, I thus conclude,

That though my homely ancestors were rude,
Mean as I am, yet may I have the grace
To make you father of a generous race.

And noble then am I, when I begin,
In virtue cloth'd, to cast the rags of sin.

Dryd.

24. To lay aside, as fit to be used or worn no longer.

blow!

You cataracts and huricanoes, spout;
Till you have drench'd our steeples. Shakspeare.

What if all

Her stores were open'd, and the firmament
Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire?
Impendent horrors! Milton's Paradise Lost.

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
And shelter'd round; but all the cataracts
Of heav'n set open, on the earth shall pour Rain, day and night. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataracts,
Thro' roads abrupt, and rude unfashion'd tracts,
Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

CATARACT. [In medicine.] A suffusion of the eye, when little clouds, motes, and flies, seem to float about in the air; when confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no admittance. Quincy.

That they have caught the king. Shakspeare.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade;
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare. Dryden.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.

Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them, Shaksp. Coriolanus.

In sooth I know not why I am so sad:
It wearies me; you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
I am to learn. Shakspeare's Mer. of Venice.

The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air; which the men could not do without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Addison's Guardian.

Or call the winds thro' long arcades to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhimers Ballad us out of tune. Shaksp. Ant. & Cleop.

Make them catch at all opportunities of subverting the state. Addison's State of the War.

To CATCH. v. n.

1. To be contagious; to spread infection, or mischief.

'T is time to give them physick, their diseases
Are grown so catching. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.
Sickness is catching; oh! were favour so,
Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go. Shaksp.

Considering it with all its malignity and catching nature, it may be enumerated with the worst of epidemics. Harvey.

The palace of Deiphobus ascends
In smoky flames, and catches on his friends. Dryden.

Does the sedition catch from man to man,
And run among the ranks? Addison.

2. To lay hold suddenly; as, the hook catches.

C A T

When the yellow hair in flame should fall,
The catching fire might burn the golden cawl.

Dryden.

CATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Seizure; the act of seizing any thing that flies or hides.

Taught by his open eye,
His eye, that ev'n did mark her trodden grass,
That she would fain the catch of Strephon fly.

Sidney.

2. Watch; the posture of seizing.

Both of them lay upon the catch for a great action; it is no wonder, therefore, that they were often engaged on one subject.

Addison.

3. An advantage taken; hold laid on, as in haste.

All which notions are but ignorant catches of a few things, which are most obvious to men's observations.

Bacon.

The motion is but a catch of the wit upon a few instances; as the manner is in the philosophy received.

Bacon.

Fate of empires, and the fall of kings,
Should turn on flying hours, and catch of moments.

Dryden.

4. The act of taking quickly from another.

Several quires, placed one over against another, and taking the voice by catches anthem wise, give great pleasure.

Bacon.

5. A song sung in succession, where one catches it from another.

A plant; a species of campion.

CA'TCHPOLL. n. s. [from catch and poll.]

A serjeant; a bumbailiff.

Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause.

Cowell.

They call all temporal businesses under sheriffs, as if they were but matters for undersheriffs and catchpolls; though many times those undersheriffs do more good than their high speculations.

Bacon's Essays.

Another monster,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods

C A T

With force incredible and magic charms
Ere have endued, if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor.

Philp.

For soldiers stomachs always serve them well.

Shakspeare.

CATECHE'TICAL. adj. [from κατηχητικός.]

Consisting of questions and answers. Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him, out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong.

Addison.

CATECHE'TICALLY. adv. [from catechetical.] In the way of question and answer.

To CATECHISE. v. a. [κατηχίζω.]

1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.

I will catechise the world for him; that is, make questions, and bid them answer.

Shakspeare.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern casuists, we had seen a wide difference.

Deasy of Piety.

2. To question; to interrogate; to examine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise My picked man of countries.

Shakspeare.

There flies about a strange report,
Of some express arriv'd at court;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in ev'ry street.

Swift.

CA'TECHISER. n. s. [from To catechise.]

One who catechises.

CA'TECHISM. n. s. [from κατηχισμός.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry, always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechisms.

Hooker.

He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world.

South.

CA'TECHIST. n. s. [κατηχιστής.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

CATECHU'MEN. n. s. [κατηχουμένοι.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

Was no dispute between

The caterwauling bretheren? Hudibras.

CATES. n. s. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have cates in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat: generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, sir, creates
The entertainment perfect, not the cates.

Ben Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content
With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious
Of cates by land and sea far fetch and sent.

Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,

Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milt.

They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste

Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip

Their palatable bane. Philips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,

Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbutnot.

CATHARTICAL. } adj. [καθαρτικός.] Purg-CATHARTICK. } ing medicines. The verricular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a catbartick hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge.

Quincy.
Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough catbartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle's Septic Chymist.
Lustrations and catbarticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.
The piercing causticks ply their spiteful powers, Emetics ranch, and keen catbarticks scour.

Gartb.
Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the catbarticks or purgatives of the soul. Addison.
CATHARTICALNESS. n. s. [from catbartical.] Purging quality.

CATHEAD. n. s. A kind of fossil.

The nodules with leaves in them, called cat-heads, seem to consist of a sort of iron stone, not unlike that which is found in the rocks near Whitehaven in Cumberland, where they call them catscaups.

Woodward on Fossils.
CATHEAD. n. s. [In a ship.] A piece of timber with two shivers at one end, having a rope and a block, to which is fastened a great iron hook, to trice up the anchor from the hawse to the top of the forecastle.

Several divines, in order to answer the cavils of those adversaries to truth and morality, began to find out farther explanations. Swift.

CAVILLA'TION. n. s. [from cavil.] The disposition to make captious objection; the practice of objecting.

I might add so much concerning the large odds between the case of the eldest churches in regard of heathens, and ours in respect of the church of Rome, that very cavillation itself should be satisfied. Hobbes.

CA'VILLER. n. s. [cavillator, Lat.] A man fond of making objections; an unfair adversary; a captious disputant.

The candour which Horace shews, is that which distinguishes a critic from a caviller; he declares, that he is not offended at such faults, which may be imputed to inadvertency. Addison.

There is, I grant, room still left for a caviller to misrepresent my meaning. Arbuthnot.

CA'VILLINGLY. adv. [from cavilling.] In a cavilling manner.

CA'VILLOUS. adj. [from cavil.] Unfair in argument; full of objections.

Those persons are said to be cavillous and unfaithful advocates, by whose fraud and inquiry justice is destroyed. Ayliffe.

CAVIN. n. s. [French. In the military art.] A natural hollow, fit to cover a body of troops, and consequently facilitate their approach to a place. Dict.

CA'VITY. n. s. [cavitas, Latin.] Hollowness; hollow; hollow place.

The vowels are made by a free passage of breath, vocalized through the cavity of the mouth; the said cavity being differently shaped by the postures of the throat, tongue, and lips. Heider.

There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish which is of a perishing kind. Dryden.

Materials packed together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull. Addison.

An instrument with a small cavity, like a small spoon, dipt in oil, may fetch out the stone. Arbuthnot on Diet.

If the atmosphere was reduced into water, it would not make an orb above thirty-two feet deep, which would soon be swallowed up by the cavity of the sea, and the depressed parts of the earth. Bentley.

CAUK. n. s. A coarse talky spar. Woodward.

CA'UKY. adj. [from cauk.] A white opaque, cauky spar, shot or pointed. Woodward on Fossils.

CAUL. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The net in which women enclose their hair; the hinder part of a woman's cap.
Ne spared they to strip her naked all;
Then when they had despoil'd her tire and caul,
Such as she was, their eyes might her behold. Spenser.

Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd,
And in a golden caul the curls are bound. Dryden.

2. Any kind of small net.
An Indian mantle of feathers, and the feathers wrought into a caul of packthread. Græw.

3. The omentum; the integument in which the guts are enclosed.

The caul serves for the warming the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth. Hence a certain gladiatour, whose caul Galen cut out, was so liable to suffer cold, that he kept his belly constantly covered with wool. Ray.

The beast they then divide, and disunite the ribs and limbs, observant of the rite:

On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
The choicest morsels lay. Pope.

CAULIFEROUS. adj. [from caulis, a stalk, and fero, to bear, Lat.] A term in botany for such plants as have a true stalk, which a great many have not.

CAULIFLOWER. n. s. [from caulis, Lat. the stalk of a plant.] A species of cabbage.

Towards the end of the month, earth up your winter plants and salad herbs; and plant forth your cauliflowers and cabbage which were sown in August. Evelyn's Kalendar.

To CAULK. See To CALK.

To CA'UPONATE. v. n. [caupono, Latin.] To keep a victualling house; to sell wine or victuals. Dict.

CA'USABLE. adj. [from causo, low Lat.] That may be caused, or effected by a cause.

That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another. Brown.

CA'USAL. adj. [causalis, low Latin.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.

Every motion owning a dependence on pre-requisite motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly pry into the whole method of causal concatenation. Glanville.

Causal propositions are, where two propositions are joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, that they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel. Watts' Logick.

CAUSA'LITY. n. s. [causalitas, low Latin.] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.

As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in his very essence, as being the soul of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

By an unadvised transiency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Sceptic.

CA'USALLY. adv. [from causal] According to the order or series of causes.

Thus may it more be causally made out, what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown.

CAUSA'TION. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.

Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions; ascribing effects therunto of independent causation. Brown.

CA'USATIVE. adj. [a term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

CAUSA'TOR. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] A causer; an author of any effect.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the asropegy of hell, to work them from it. Brown's Vul. Err.

CAUSE. n. s. [causa, Latin.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

VOL. I.

The wise and learned, amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat. Bacon.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakespeare.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal sir! to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryd.
Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the cause,
Which to the stream the crowding people draws. Dryden.

Even he,
Lamenting that there had been cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends. Rowe.

3. Reason of debate; subject of litigation.

O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against itself!
Bifold authority. Shakespeare.

Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deut.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Ticket.

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining. Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.
She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair. Dryden.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CA'USELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law; and undervalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

CA'USELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach'th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same I have no might:
To charge love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

H h

And me and mine threats not with war but death:

Thus causeless hatred endless is unseath. Fairfax.
The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.
Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded, Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

CA'USER. n. s. [from caus.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects. Rogers.

CA'USEY. } n. s. [chaussée, Fr.] This CA'USEWAY. } word, by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shuppim the lot came forth westward by the causway. 1 Chron.

The other way Satan went down,
The causway to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.

Whose causway parts the vale with shady rows;

Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CA'USTICAL. } adj. [causticus, Lat.] Epithets

CA'USTICK. } of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar: which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacancy in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or escaroticks. Wiseman.

I proposed eradicating by escaroticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbutnot.

CA'USTICK. n. s. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful power, Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

CA'UTEL. n. s. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple. Not used.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no soil of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

i. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.
Palladio doth wish, like a cauteleous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Waller.

2. Willy; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cauteleous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son

Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cauteleous baits and practice. Shakespeare.
CA'UTELOUSLY, adv. [from cauteleous.]

1. Cunningly; sily; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cauteleously get the start and advantage; yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the scitatic side of Jacob, do cauteleously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brava.

CAUTERIZA'TION. n. s. [from cauterize.]

The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wueman.

To CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.]

To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue, Shakespeare.

Consuming it with speaking.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CAUTERY. n. s. [cauterio, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the efflux of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wueman.

CAUTION. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the conditions as might assure with as much assurance worldly matters bear. Shakespeare.

The Cedar, upon this new acquiescence, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements. Hend.

The parliament would yet give him no sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Aylmer.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal vices will come off. L'Escur.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions, and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbutnot.

C E A

5. Warning.

TO CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The diff'rent shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy!
Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CAUTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it.

Southorne.
Is there no security for the island of Britain?
Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison.

TO CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Russet-pated crows, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shaksp.
A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws. Thomson's Spring.

TO CEASE. v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist: with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;
My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryd.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that mole corporis, and are no longer in it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

TO CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd with slight denial. Shakspere.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton.

But he, her fears to cease,

Sent down the meek-eyed peace. Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryden.

CEASE. n. s. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty

Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws

What's near it with it. Shakspere.

CEASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,

On which my endless tears were bootless spent. Fairfax.

All these with ceaseless praise his works behold.

Both day and night. Milton.

Like an oak

That stands secure, though all the winds employ

Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves,

Or mast, which the revolving spring restores. Philips.

CECITY. n. s. [cecitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see;
there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecucency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CECUTIENCY. n. s. [cecutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecucency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CEDAR. n. s. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinate. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and sound. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge;
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;
Whose top branch overpore'd love's spreading tree,

CEL

And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind. Shakespeare.

CEDRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

TO CEIL. v. a. [celo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. Chronicles.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Daisy of Piety.

CEILING. n. s. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down rush'd the rain Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side;
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

CELANDINE. n. s. [celidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The wallows use celandine, the linnet euphrasia. Mora.

CELATURE. n. s. [celatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in figures.

TO CELEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adorned or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages. Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath. 2 Maccabees.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner; whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r 't is Ireland's hour to mourn;

While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

CELEBRATION. n. s. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,
While you are willing it shall come to note;

What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakespeare.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety, and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

CELEBRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured with sacrifices the Most High God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew.

CEL

CELEBRIOUSLY. adj. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELEBRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELEBRITY. n. s. [celebritas, Lat.] Public and splendid transaction.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELEBRICK. n. s. A species of parsley: it is also called turnep rooted celery.

CELERITY. n. s. [celeritas, Lat.] Swift-ness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse: for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hobbes.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift celes flies,

In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakespeare.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Dugli.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot.

CELERY. n. s. A species of parsley.

CELESTIAL. adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superior regions.

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning. Shakespeare.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climes to their own. Brown.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakespeare.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom real inflam?
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd? Dryden.
Telemachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

CELESTIAL. n. s. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild the prince precedes
And to the dome th' unknown celestial lends. Pope.

CELESTIALLY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

TO CELESTIFY. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrialized, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown's Fugate Errors.

CELIACK. adj. [celia, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints, Arbutnot on Aliments.

Celibacy. n. s. [from cellebs, Lat.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

Celibate. n. s. [celibatus, Lat.] Single life.

The males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

Cell. n. s. [cella, Lat.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place:

The brain contains ten thousand cells;

In each some active fancy dwells. Prior.

How bees for ever, though a monarch reign,
Their sep'rate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.

Besides, she did intend confession

At Patrick's cell this ev'n; and there she went not. Shakespeare.

Then did religion in a lazy cell,
In empty, airy contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.

4. Any small place of residence; a cottage.

Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell
Offancy, my internal sight. Milton's Par. Lost.

For ever in this humble cell,
Let thee and I together dwell. Prior.

In cottages and lowly cells
True piety neglected dwells;

Till call'd to heav'n, its native seat,
Where the good man alone is great. Somerville.

5. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts, are lodged; common both to animals and plants. Quincy.

Cellar. n. s. [cella, Lat.] A place under ground, where stores and liquors are repositied.

If this fellow had lived in the time of Cato, he would, for his punishment, have been confined to the bottom of a cellar during his life. Peacbam on Drawing.

There had been a mighty confusion of things, an interruption and perturbation of the ordinary course, and a cessation and suspension of the laws of nature.

Woodward's Natural History.

The rising of a parliament is a kind of cessation from politics.

Addison's Freeholder.

3. End of action; the state of ceasing to act.

The serum, which is mixed with an alkali, being poured out to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence; at the cessation of which, the salts, of which the acid was composed, will be regenerated.

Arbutnot.

4. A pause of hostility, without peace.

When the succours of the poor protestants in Ireland were diverted, I was intreated to get them some respite, by a cessation.

King Charles.

CESSAVIT. n. s. [Lat.] A writ that lies upon this general ground, that the person against whom it is brought, hath, for two years, omitted to perform such service, or pay such rent, as he is obliged by his tenure; and hath not, upon his land or tenement, sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained.

Cowell.

CESSIB'ILITY. n. s. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] The quality of receding, or giving way, without resistance.

If the subject stricken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas, if the thing stricken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect.

Digby on the Soul.

CE'SSIBLE. adj. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.]

Easy to give way.

If the parts of the stricken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body, till it has spent its force.

Digby on the Soul.

CE'SSION. n. s. [cession, Fr. cessio, Lat.]

1. Retreat; the act of giving way.

Sound is not produced without some resistance, either in the air or the body percussed: for if there be a mere yielding, or cession, it produceth no sound.

Bacon's Nat. History.

2. Resignation; the act of yielding up or quitting to another.

A party in their council would make and secure the best peace they can with France, by a cession of Flanders to that crown, in exchange for other provinces.

Temple.

CE'SSIONARY. adj. [from cession.] As, a cessionary bankrupt, one who has delivered up all his effects.

Martin.

CE'SSMENT. n. s. [from cess.] An assessment or tax.

Dict.

CE'SSOR. n. s. [from cesso, Lat. In law.]

He that ceaseth or neglecteth so long to perform a duty belonging to him, as that by his cess, or ceasing, he incurreth the danger of law, and hath, or may have, the writ cessavit brought against him. Where it is said the tenant ceaseth, such phrase is to be understood as if it were said, the tenant ceaseth to do that which he ought, or is bound, to do by his land or tenement.

Cowell.

CE'STUS. n. s. [Latin.] The girdle of Venus.

Venus, without any ornament but her own beauties; not so much as her own cestus.

Idid.

CETA'CEOUS. adj. [from cete, whales, Lat.] Of the whale kind.

Such fishes as have lungs or respiration are not without the wezzon, as whales and cetaceous animals.

Brown's Vul. Et.

He hath created variety of these cetaceous fishes, which converse chiefly in the northern seas, whose whole body being encompassed round with a copious fat or blubber, it is enabled to abide the greatest cold of the sea-water.

Ray on the Creation.

C FAUT. A note in the scale of musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord;

A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;

B mi Bianca, take him for thy lord,

C faut, that loves with all affection.

Shakspeare.

CH has, in words purely English, or fully naturalized, the sound of tib; a peculiar pronunciation, which it is hard to describe in words. In some words derived from the French, it has the sound of sh, as chaise; and, in some derived from the Greek, the sound of h, as cholerick.

CHACE. See CHASE.

CHAD. n. s. A sort of fish.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, whiting, chad, cels, congar, millet.

To CHAFE. v. a. [exchauffer, French.]

1. To warm with rubbing.

They said him upon some of their garments, and fell to rub and chafe him, till they brought him to recover both breath, the servant, and warmth, the companion, of living.

Sidney.

C H A

As last, recovering heart, he does begin
To rub her temples, and to chafe her skin.

Fairy Queen.

Soft, and more soft, at ev'ry touch it grew;
Like plant wax, when chafing hands reduce
The former mass to form, and frame to use.

Dryden.

2. To heat by rage or hurry.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,

Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat?

Shakespeare.

3. To perfume.

Lillies more white than snow

New fall'n from heav'n, with violets mix'd, did grow;

Whose scent so chaf'd the neighbour air, that you
Would surely swear Arabick spices grew.

Suckling.

4. To make angry; to inflame passion.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her. Shaks.

An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together.

Sir John Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knelles's History of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryd.

To CHAFE. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,
And chaf'd at that indignity right sore. Spenser.

He will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter, Shakespeare.

Be lion mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are.

Shakespeare.

How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe,
And swear!—not Addison himself was safe.

Pope.

2. To fret against any thing.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores.

Shakespeare's J. Caesar.

The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd pebbles idly chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

CHAFE. n. s. [from the verb.] A heat;
a rage; a fury; a passion; a fume; a pett; a fret; a storm.

When sir Thomas More was speaker of the parliament, with his wisdom and eloquence he so crossed a purpose of cardinal Wolsey's, that the cardinal, in a chafe, sent for him to Whitehall. Camden's Remains.

At this the knight grew high in chafe,
And staring furiously on Ralph,
He trembled. Hudibras.

plete bars, and brought to perfection.

Phillips.

C H A

CHAFF. n. s. [ceap, Sax. kaf, Dutch.]

1. The husks of corn that are separated by thrashing and winnowing.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff.
And good from bad find no partition. Shakespeare.

Pleasure with instruction should be join'd;
So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind.

Dryden.

He set before him a sack of wheat, as it had been just threshed out of the sheaf; he then bid him pick out the chaff from among the corn, and lay it aside by itself. Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing worthless.

To CHAFFER. v. n. [kauffen, Germ, to buy.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

Nor rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,
To chaffer for preferments with his gold,
Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold. Dryd.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t' other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar. Swift.

In disputes with chairmen, when your master sends you to chaffer with them, take pity, and tell your master that they will not take a farthing less. Swift.

To CHAFFER. v. a. [The active sense is obsolete.]

1. To buy.

He chaffer'd chairs in which churchmen were set,

And breach of laws to privy farm did let. Spenser.

The third is, merchandize and chaffery; that is, buying and selling. Spenser's State of Ireland.

CHAFFFINCH. n. s. [from chaff and finch.]
A bird so called, because it delights in chaff, and is by some much admired for its song. Phillips's World of Words.

The chaffinch, and other small birds, are injurious to some fruits. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHAFFFLESS. adj. [from chaff.] Without chaff.

The love I bear him,
Made me to fan you thus; but the gods made you,
Unlike all others, chaffers. Shakespeare's Cymb.

CHAFFWEED. n. s. [gnaphalium, Latin.]
An herb, the same with cudweed.

CHAFFY. adj. [from chaff.] Like chaff;
full of chaff; light.

If the straws be light and chaffy, and held at a reasonable distance, they will not rise unto the middle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The most slight and chaffy opinion, if at a great remove from the present age, contracts a veneration. Glanville.

CHAFINGDISH. n. s. [from chafe and disb.] A vessel to make any thing hot in; a portable grate for coals.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantities, whether it will endure the ordinary fire which belongeth to chafingdishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels. Bacon.

CHAGRIN. n. s. [chagrine, Fr.] Ill humour; vexation; fretfulness; peevishness. It is pronounced shagreen.

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin;
That single act gives half the world the spleen.

Pope.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences and chagrins, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo.

Pope's Letters.

To CHAGRIN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To vex; to put out of temper; to tease; to make uneasy.

CHAIN. n. s. [chaine, French.]

Genesis.

2. A bond; a manacle; a fetter; something with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suff'ring sex remains,
Or bound in formal, or in real chains.

Pope.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyor may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest sight of mind, reach it; or, by thinking, comprehend it.

Locke.

4. A series linked together, as of causes or thoughts; a succession; a subordination.

Those so mistake the christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil.

Hammond.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To CHAIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten or bind with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

The mariners he chained in his own galleys for slaves.

Kneller.

Or march'd I chain'd behind the hostile car,
The victor's pastime, and the sport of war?

Prior.

They, with joint force oppression chaining, set Imperial justice at the helm.

Thomson.

2. To enslave; to keep in slavery.

The monarch was ador'd, the people chain'd.

Prior.

This world, 't is true,
Was made for Cæsar; but for Titus too:
And which more blest? who chain'd his country,

say,

Or he whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day? Pope.

3. To keep by a chain.

The admiral seeing the mouth of the haven chained, and the castles full of ordnance, and strongly manned, durst not attempt to enter.

Kneller's History of the Turks.

4. To unite.

O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.

Shakspeare.

CHAINPUMP. n. s. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended; but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise.

Chambers.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great ease to great ships, both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised; together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did; and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.

Relaigh's Essay.

CHAINSHOT. n. s. [from chain and shot.]

Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they fly open, cut away whatever is before them.

In sea fights, oftentimes, a buttock, the brow of the thigh, and the calf of the leg, are torn off by the chainshot, and splinters.

Wumen.

CHAINWORK. n. s. [from chain and work.] Work with open spaces like the links of a chain.

Nets of chequerwork, and wreaths of chainwork, for the chapters which were upon the tops of the pillars.

King.

CHAIR. n. s. [chair, French.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choosee Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbend.

Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back.

Watts.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—

—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unway'd?
Is the king dead? Shakspeare's Richard III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;
For chair and dukedom, throne and dukedom,
say;

Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.

Shakspeare.

The honour'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice Supply with worthy men.

Shakspeare.

Her grace sat down to rest awhile,
In a rich chair of state.

Shakspeare.

The committee of the commons appointed
Mr. Pym to take the chair.

Clarendon.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,
The seat of audience, old Latinus sat.

Dryden.

3. A vehicle born by men; a sedan.

And view with scorn two pages and a chair.

Pope.

CHAIRMAN. n. s. [from chair and man.]

1. The president of an assembly.

In assemblies generally one person is chosen chairman or moderator, to keep the several speakers to the rules of order.

Watts.

2. One whose trade it is to carry a chair.

One elbows him, one justles in the shole;
A rafter breaks his head, or chairmen's pole.

Dryden.

Troy chairmen bore the wooden steed,
Pregnant with Greeks, impatient to be freed;
Those bully Greeks, who, as the moderns do,
Instead of paying chairmen, run them through.

See: ft.

CHAISE. n. s. [chaise, Fr.] A carriage of pleasure drawn by one horse.

Instead of the chariot he might have said the chaise of government; for a chaise is driven by the person that sits in it.

Addis.

CHALCOGRAPHER. n. s. [χαλκογράφος, of χαλκός, brass, and γράφω, to write or engrave.] An engraver in brass.

CHALICE. n. s. [calic, Sax. calice, Fr. calix, Latin.]

1. A cup; a bowl.
When in your motion you are hot,
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him

A calice for the nonce. Shakespeare.
2. It is generally used for a cup used in acts of worship.

All the church at that time did not think emblematical figures unlawful ornaments of cups or calices. Stillingfleet.

CHALICED. adj. [from calix, Lat. the cup of a flower.] Having a cell or cup: applied by Shakespeare to a flower, but now obsolete.

Hark, hark! the lark at heav'n's gate sings,
And Phœbus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at these springs,
On calic'd flowers that lies. Shakespeare.

CHALK. n. s. [cealc, cealcstan, Saxon, calek, Welsh.]

Chalk is a white fassile, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the bones. It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn. Chambers.

He maketh all the stones of the altar chalk stones that are beaten in sunder. Isaiah.

Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lands, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost. Mortimer.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits must appear. Dryden.

TO CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub with chalk.
The beastly rabble then came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls and shopboards in vast swarms,
With new chalk'd bills and rusty arms. Hudibras.

2. To manure with chalk.
Land that is chalked, if it is not well dunged, will receive but little benefit from a second chalking. Mortimer.

3. To mark or trace out as with chalk.
Being not prout by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way. Shakespeare.
His own mind chalked out to him the just proportions and measures of behaviour to his fellow-creatures. South.

With these helps I might at least have chalked out a way for others, to amend my errors in a like design. Dryden.

The time falls within the compass here chalked out by nature, very punctually. Woodward.

CHALK-CUTTER. n. s. [from chalk and cut.] A man that digs chalk.

Shells, by the seamen called chalk eggs, are dug up commonly in the chalk-pits, where the chalk-cutters drive a great trade with them. Woodward.

CHALK-PIT. n. s. [from chalk and pit.] A pit in which chalk is dug. See CHALK-CUTTER.

CHALKY. adj. [from chalk.]

1. Consisting of chalk; white with chalk.

As far as I could ken the chalky cliffs,
When from thy shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm. Shakspeare.
That bellowing beats on Dover's chalky cliffs. Romeo.

2. Impregnated with chalk.

Chalky water towards the top of earth is too fretting. Bacon.

TO CHALLENGE. v. a. [challenger, Fr.]

1. To call another to answer for an offence by combat.

The prince of Wales stept forth before the king,
And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight. Shakespeare.

2. To call to a contest.

Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryden.
I challenge any man to make any pretence to power by right of fatherhood, either intelligible or possible. Locke.

3. To accuse.

Many of them be such losels and scatterlings, as that they cannot easily by any sheriff be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom may I rather challenge for unkindness. Shakespeare.

4. [In law.] To object to the impartiality of any one. [See the noun.]

Though only twelve are sworn, yet twenty-four are to be returned, to supply the defects or want of appearance of those that are challenged off, or make default. Hale.

5. To claim as due.

That divine order, whereby the pre-eminence of chiefest acceptation is by the best things worthily challenged. Hooker.

Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?
That we our largest bounty may extend Where nature doth with merit challenge. Shakspeare.

And so much duty as my mother shew'd
To you, preferring you before her father;
So much I challenge, that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord. Shakespeare.

Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Did challenge pity of them. Shakespeare.

So when a tyger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Roars loudly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden.

Hast thou yet drawn o'er young Juba?

That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,
And challenge better terms. Addison.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazoury. Peacham on Drawing.

CHALLENGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly. Shakspeare.

2. A demand of something as due.

Taking for his younglings cark,
Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Busy with oker did their shoulders mark. Silvery.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom. Collier.

3. In law.

the land in contest, or part of the gains. Cowell.

CHAMPERTY. n. s. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit, while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowell.

CHAMPIGNON. n. s. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

Heviler friends with doubtful mushroom treats, Secure from you, himself champignons eats. Dryd.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodward.

CHAMPION. n. s. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,

Strive here for mast'ry, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms. Milton's Par. Lost.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear;
The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest.

A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakespeare.

This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Cowell.

TO CHAMPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo, kings!
Rather than so, come, Fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakespeare.

CHANCE. n. s. [chance, Fr.]

2. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakespeare.

The only man, of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them. Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring; applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance. Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. South.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead;

Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death is ev'ry glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see. Pope.

4. Event; success; luck; applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chances of goodness
Belike our warranted quarrel! Shakespeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear. Shakespeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,

They met like chance companions on the way. Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden.

TO CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think—

Thou hast thy mistress still. Shakespeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakespeare.

Ay, Casca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Caesar looks so sad. Shakespeare.

He chanc'd upon divers of the Turks' victuallers, whom he easily took. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind. Pope.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. s. [from chance and medley. In law.] The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain; in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself. Cowell.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley. Swift.

CHANCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chancellor's coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

In this advent'rous chanceful jeopardy. Spenser.

CHANCEL. n. s. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was enclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel. Baker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Addison.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. s. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellor, Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum lineâ per medium ductâ dammare; and cœmeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with μυκταί, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæsitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli, Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

*Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.*

Verses of Nigel de Wetchre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharius, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis iudicum actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience.

Cowell.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.

Dryden jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; so that he was in a manner, chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHA'NCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe.

3. CHA'NCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. CHA'NCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first-fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only.

Cowell. Chambers.

5. CHA'NCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who at Oxford holds his office during life, but at Cambridge he may be elected every three years.

6. CHA'NCELLOR of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order.

Chambers.

CHA'NCELLORSHIP. n. s. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

CHA'NCERY. n. s. [from chancellor; probably chancellery, then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal. Cowell.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishop's letters under the seal episcopal. Ayliffe.

CHA'NCRE. n. s. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wiseman.

CHA'NCROUS. adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancreous callus. Wiseman.

CHANDELIER. n. s. [candelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHA'NDLER. n. s. [candelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn, The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born, With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

CHA'NFRIN. n. s. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. ambio, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse,

They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thou sands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.

Thou shalt not see me blush,

Nor change my countenance, for this arrest;
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shaks.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Ecclesi.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony; like as in a psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Wisdom.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Intreat some pow'r to change this curriish Jew. Shakspeare.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into to several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change band, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left.

Farrier's Dict.

TO CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shakspeare.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakspeare.

CHANGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

Since I saw you last,

There is a change upon you. Shakspeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wond'rous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill-breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know
A different master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' varied lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with fury, and now melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.

The hearts

Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shak.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair;
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judith.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five-and-twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs.

The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

CHANGEABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shak.

CHANGEABLENESS. n. s. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness, with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hobbes.

CHANGEABLY. adv. [from changeable.]

Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL. adj. [from change and full.]

Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted. Spenser.

Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELING. n. s. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left:
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, bath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling. Shakspeare.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.
Changelings and fools of hear'n, and thence shut out,
 Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden.
 Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.
 Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
 That gape and rub the elbow at the news
 Of hurly-burly innovation. Shakspeare.

- "T was not long Before from world to world they swung;
 As they had turn'd from side to side,
 And as the changelings liv'd, they died. Hudib.
4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech.
 I folded the writ up in form of the other,
 Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
 The changeling never known. Shakspeare.

- CH'ANGER. n. s. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money; moneychanger.

- CH'ANNEL. n. s. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.
 It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser's State of Ireland.

- Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
 Into the channel, till the lowest stream
 Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shakspeare.
 So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wonted course,

- To gain some acres, avarice did force;
 If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
 No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.
 Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward.

- The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

1. Any cavity drawn longwise.
 Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
 And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell. Dryden's Fables.

1. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel, between Britain and France; St. George's Channel, between Britain and Ireland.

1. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

1. CH'ANNEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and in-vent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos.
 Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
 And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
 And wing'd his flight to chant aloft in air. Dryden.

- CHANT. n. s. [from the verb.] Song; melody.

A pleasant grove,
 With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud.

- Miltoth.*
 CH'ANTER. n. s. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood;
 That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Wotton.
 Jove's etherial lays, resistless fire,
 The chanter's soul and raptur'd song inspire,
 Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
 Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice.

- Pope.*
 CH'ANTICLEER. n. s. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And cheerful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
 Had warn'd once, that Phœbus' fiery car
 In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.

Hark, hark, I hear
 The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shakspeare.

Stay, the cheerful chanticleer

Tells you that the time is near. Ben Jonson.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer
 For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden.

- CH'ANTRESS. n. s. [from chant.] A woman singer

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!
 Thee, chantress, oft, the woods among,
 I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

- CH'ANTRY. n. s. [from chant.] A church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowell.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
 Into the chantry by;
 And, underneath that consecrated roof,
 Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shakspeare.

- CHA'OS. n. s. [chaos, Lat. $\chi\alpha\omicron\varsigma$.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a con-fused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of con-fusions, as some have done. K. Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes, Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
 From words and things, ill sorted, and misjoin'd;
 The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind.

- Dryden.*
 3. Any thing where the parts are un-distinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,

One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHA

CHAO'TICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subsided, then those several beds were, in all probability, repositied in the earth. Derham.

To CHAP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut.

This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chopping it in sundry places. Burnet.

pannelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Cowell.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light

Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

It is not to be wondered, that the great char- ter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon

Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Ralph's Essay.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown

All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denb.

She shakes the rubbish from her mountain-brow,

And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,

Which heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,

Withal as large a charter as the wind,

To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;

And they that are most galled with my folly,

They most must laugh. Shakspeare.

My mother,

Who has a charter to extol her blood,

When she does praise me, grieves me. Shaksp.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. s. [chartre-partie,

Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hals.

CHA'TERED. adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shaksp.

CHA'RY. adj. [from carr.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required. Careto's Survey of Cornwall.

The charic maid is prodigal enough,

If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shaksp.

To CHASE. v. a. [chasser, French.]

1. To hunt.

It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiab.

Mine enemies chased me sore like a bird.

Lamentations.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him. Judges.

One of you shall chase a thousand. Deut.

3. To drive away.

He that chasteth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chased by their brother's endless malice from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bisennis. Knolles' History of the Turks.

When the following morn had chas'd away

The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

To CHASE Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hast'ning in the chase, it seems,

Of this fair couple, meets he on the way

The father of this seeming lady. Shakspere.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakspere.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;

Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,

Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,

And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them; and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knolles' History of the Turks.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow

Expanded on the hero's face,

When the thick squadrons press the foe,

And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursued,

Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryd.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Shaksp.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must put this deer to death. Shak.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,

And recompense the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game, than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot: and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Covell.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shak.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside. Chambérs.

CHASE-GUN. n. s. [from chase and gun.]

Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean-time the Belgians tack upon our rear,

And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHA'SER. n. s. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began

A stop i' th' chasser, a retire; anon

A rout, confusion thick. Shakspere.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye

Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denk.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,

At once the chaser, and at once the prey!

Lo, Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart,

Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchaser.

CHASM. n. s. [χάσμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no

chasms or gaps. Locke.

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground adust her riven mouth disparts,

Horrible chasm! profound. Philips.

2. A placed unfilled; a vacancy.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,

No action leave to busy chronicles;

Such, whose supine felicity but makes

In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

CHASSELAS. n. s. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE. adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.].

CHA'STELY. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here; no, thought it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shakespeare.

Make first a song of joy and love,
Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,
Which chastely in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began. Dryden.

To CHA'STEN. v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Proverbs.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path
Thou lead'st me, and to the hand of heav'n submit,
However chast'ning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Rowe.

From our lost pursuit she wills to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

To CHASTISE. v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakespeare.

casting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,
He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

He thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.

Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shakespeare.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. s. [chastiment, Fr.]

Correction; punishment; commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shakespeare.

He held the chastisement of one, which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God. Raleigh.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of,
but lying, or ill-natured tricks, the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affection from the world. Bentley.

CHASTISER. n. s. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHA'STITY. n. s. [castitas, Lat.]1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shakespeare.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence, of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor.

Ev'n here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Shakespeare.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.CHA'STNESS. n. s. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads. Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love. Shaksp.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row. Milton.

With much good-will the motion was embraced
To chat a while on their adventures past. Dryden.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.
All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

Are spectacted to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,

While she chats him. Shakespeare.

CHAT. n. s. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo; I myself would make A chough of as deep chat. Shakespeare.

The time between before the fire they sat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryden.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club. Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT. n. s. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

CHE'STNUT-TREE. } castanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

CHE

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakspere.
October has a basket of services, medlars, and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour.—
—An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakspere.

Which gifts the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakspere.
O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretch'd is from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shaksp.

CHEVISANCE. n. s. [chevisance, Fr.] Enterprize; achievement. Not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisants,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spence.

CHEVRON. n. s. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in herakry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceopyan, Sax. hawcan, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.
If little faults proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at; how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us? Shakspere.

CHI

Pacing through the forest,
Cheewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy.

Shakespeare.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
 Nor cheew'd the flesh, of lambs. Dryden's Fables.

The vales

Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chevus verd'rous pasture.

Philips.

By cheewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of cheewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; to ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fiece monk does at his trial stand,
 He chevus revenge, abjuring his offence:

Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
 He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence.

Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heaven's in my mouth,

As if I did but only chev its name. Shakespeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be cheved and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention.

Bacon.

To CHIEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
 Till then, my noble friend, chev upon this.

Shakespeare.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chev upon 't.

L'Estrange.

Old politicians chev on wisdom past,
 And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICANE. n. s. [chicane, Fr. derived by Ménage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason.

Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane.

Arbutnot.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
 He strove to lengthen the campaign,
 And save his forces by chicane.

Prior.

To CHICA'NE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICA'NER. n. s. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

All my pretty ones!

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop!

Shakespeare.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick.

Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale.

Even since she was a se'en-night old, they say,
 Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
 Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryd.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick.

Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,

Upon a chick and pint of wine:

On rainy days I dine alone,

And pick my chicken to the bone.

Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,

Shakespeare.

This is thy charge.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate

Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;

Speak thou, boy; Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons. Shakspeare.

CHIL'DLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. 1 Samuel.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Bacon's Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton.

She can give the reason why one died childless. Spectator.

CHIL'DLIKE. adj. [from child and like.]

Becoming or beseeeming a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty. Shakspeare.

CHIL'LIAD. n. s. [from χίλια.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years, as decades, centuries, chiliads, for the use of computation in history. Helder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. s. [from χίλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Lack.

CHILIFA'CTIVE. } adj. [from chyle. See CHILIFA'CTORY. } CHYLIFACTIVE. }

That has the quality of making chyle.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chylifactive mutation, or alimantal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We should rather rely upon a chylifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICATION. n. s. [See CHYLIFICATION.] The act of making chyle.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendency to chilification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that is cold to the touch.
And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart and my chill veins freeze with despair. Rousse.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. s. [from the adjective.] Chiness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.
Age has not yet
So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryd.
Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,
And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creech.

Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.
Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear. Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.
The fruits perish on the ground,
Or soon decay, by snows immoderate chill'd,
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

CHILLINESS. n. s. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acute.

ness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbutnot.

CHI'LLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews

My shudd'ring limbs.

Philips.

CHI'LNES. n. s. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chilness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A generous chilness seizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIME. n. s. [kime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. s. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minsheu suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churm, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

x. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;
That, as we do strike a tune,
In our dance shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.

The sound

Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton.

Love virtue, she alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the sphyry chime. Milton.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shaks.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another; in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Grew.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonance.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below. Dryd.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMERA. n. s. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece; Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryden.

Nobody joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIMERICALLY. adv [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

CHIMINAGE. n. s. [from chimiu, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

CHIMNEY. n. s. [cheminée, French.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoke. Swift

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimnies were blown down. Shakspeare.

3. The fire-place.

The chimney

Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece, Chaste Dian bathing. Shakspeare.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Kaleid.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. s. [from chimney and corner.] The fire-side; the seat on each end of the fire-grate: usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men
Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. s. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fire-place. Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. s. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her are chimneysweepers black;
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakspeare.

The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng.

Gay.

Even lying Ned, the chimney-sweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims.

Arbutnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Shakspeare.

CHIN. n. s. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.]

The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wry-ing her waist, and thrusting out her chin.

Sidney.

With his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him

Shakspeare.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
And sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin.

Dryden.

CHINA. n. s. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small-pox above them all;
And mistress of herself, though china fall.

Pope.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket.

Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. s. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange: brought originally from China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain.

Mortimer.

CHINA-ROOT. n. s. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHINCOUGH. n. s. [perhaps more properly kincoogh, from kinchin, to pant, Dutch, and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chincough complicated with an intermitting fever.

Floyer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. s. [schibine, Fr. schiena, Ital.
spina, Lat. cein, Arm.]

1. The part of the back in which the spine or backbone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine that she opened all his body.

Sidney.

He presents her with the tusky head,
And chine with rising bristles roughly spread.

Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep.

Shakspeare.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours.

Spectator.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long ribb'd Apennine.

Dryden.

CHINK. n. s. [cinan, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisbe did talk through the chink of a wall.

Shakspeare. Midsum. Night's Dream.

Plaques also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they so contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabrick.

South.

In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse.

Swift.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state;
With ready quills the dedicators wait.

Pope.

To CHINK. v. n. To sound by striking
each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'squire South's.

Arbutnot.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards.

Swift.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay.

Dryden's Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestic vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap, Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice Sure ruin.

Philips's Poems.

CHINTS. n. s. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chint, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.

Pope.

CHI'OPINE. n. s. [from chapin, Span.]
A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chiopine.

Shakspeare.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chioppines.

Cowley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Saxon cyppan ceapan, to buy.

Gibson.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled myrmidons,
Noseless, handless, hackt and chipt, come to him,

Crying on Hector. Shakspeare's Tril. and Crr.

To return to our statue in the block of marble:
we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped;
sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure.

Addison's Spectator.

The crick strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips his crust.

Industry

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone.

Thomson.

CHIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips for-biddeth.

Bacon.

That chip made iron swim, not by natural power.

Taylor.

The straw was laid below;
Of chips and serewood was the second row.

Dryden's Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.
The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and ships of stone. Woodward.

CHI

CHIPPING. n. s. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton.

CHIRAGICAL. adj. [from chiragra, Lat.]

Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the wrist, and sometimes first of all.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHIRO'GRAPHER. n. s. [χῆρ, the hand, and γράφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographers, to be engrossed. Bacon.

CHIRO'GRAPHIST. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chirosofist, or chirromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbutnot and Pope.

CHIRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIR'OMANCER. n. s. [See CHIR'OMANCY.] One that foretels future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare, To chirromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal.

CHIR'OMANCY. n. s. [χῆρ, the hand, and μανία, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chirromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
Till hard by them both he and she did stay. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived sound? Shakespeare.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes.
Gay's Pastorals.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson.

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHI

CHIRP. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,

And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet. Spectator.

CHIRPER. n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceopran, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRU'RGEON. n. s. [χῆρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgion. South's Sermons.

CHIRU'RGERY. n. s. [from chirurgion.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called surgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wiseman.

CHIRU'RGICAL. } adj. See CHIRUR- CHIRU'RGICK. } GEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgial or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgial or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHISEL. n. s. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.]

An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shakespeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil. Watson.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHISEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. s. [according to Dr. Hicks, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby: generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
"T will turn all politicks to jest. Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to show the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer.

3. A freckle. [from chickpea.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer.

CHI'TCHAT. n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of the female society, who call ourselves the chit-chat club. Spectator.

CHI'TTERLINGS. n. s. without singular. [from schysterlingh, Dut. Minsbew; from katteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. Out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. F. Queen.

CHI'VALRY. n. s. [chevalerie, French, knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as eques in Latin. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shaksp.

I may speak it to my shame,

I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakespeare.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,

That, by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,

He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous because they were but private chivalry. Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light

Did all the chivalry of England move

To do brave acts. Shakespeare.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called fiefs, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustic. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord: and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called sergeantry; and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Cowell.

CHI'VES. n. s. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives or apices of the stamina. Ray.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLORO'SIS. n. s. [from χλωρός, green.] The greensickness.

To CHOK. See CHOK.

CHO'COLATE. n. s. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The tree of the cacao or cocoa tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalement is the pointal, being a tube cut into many, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in plenty in several places between the tropics and grows wild. See COCOA.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, schiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate. Chemist.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotic liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbust.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow, And tremble at the sea that froths below. Pope.

CHO'COLATE HOUSE. n. s. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Teller.

CHODE. The old preterit of chide.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban. Genesis.

CHOICE. n. s. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse, The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryd.

Soft elocution doth thy style renounce; Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice, To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estreng.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Lat.

3. Care in choosing ; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms : it is pity his book is lost ; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen ; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty ; That you might well enjoy her. Shakspeare.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim, Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton.

Now, Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice ; Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince : in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose ; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom of what herself approves makes choice, Nor is lea'd captive by the common voice. Denb.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace. The first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly and modest, as a measure full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakspeare.

CINQUE-PORTS. n. s. [cinque ports, Fr.]

Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special governour or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque-ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction; their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque-ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rummey, and Hithe; some of which,
as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest.

To civilize and to instruct the North. Waller.

Musæus first, then Orpheus, civilize
Mankind, and give the world their deities. Denham.

Amongst those who are counted the civilized part of mankind, this original law of nature still takes place. Locke.

Osiris or Bacchus, is reported to have civilized the Indians, and reigned amongst them fifty-two years. Arbutnot.

CIVILIZER. n. s. [from civilize.] -He that reclaims others from a wild and savage life; he that teaches the rules and customs of civility.

The civilizers!—the disturbers, say;
The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!
Philips's Briton.

CIVILLY. adv. [from civil.]

1. In a manner relating to government, or to the rights or character of a member of a community; not naturally.

Men that are civil, lead their lives after one common law; for that a multitude should, without harmony, concur in the doing of one thing (for this is civilly to live), or should manage community of life, it is not possible. Hooker.

2. Not criminally.

That accusation, which is publick, is either civilly commenced for the private satisfaction of the party injured; or else criminally, that is, for some publick punishment. Ayliff.

3. Politely; complaisantly; gently; without rudeness; without brutality.

CLIMAX. n. s. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; ascent: a figure in rhetoric, by which the sentence rises gradually; as Cicero says to Catiline, Thou dost nothing, movest nothing, thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best. Dryden's Juv. Deductiv.

Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd, Still rising in a climax; till the last, Surpassing all, is not to be surpast. Gravina.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. It is pronounced like clime. [climan, Sax. klimma, Dutch.] To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants; Lean famine, quattering steel, and climbing fire. Shakspeare.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?—

—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour. Shakspeare.

Jonathan climbed up upon his hands, and upon his feet. 1 Sam.

As a thief

Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles, So clomb the first grand thief into God's fold. Milton.

Thou Sun! of this great world both eye and soul,

Acknowledge him thy greater; sound his praise In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st. And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton's Par. Lost.

No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime, By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb. Racine.

Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.

What controuling cause

Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws, Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height? Blackmore.

To CLIMB. v. a. To ascend; to mount. Is 't not enough to break into my garden, Climbing my walls, in spite of me the owner? Shakspeare.

Thy arms pursue

Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame. Prior.

Forlorn he must and persecuted fly; Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLIMBER. n. s. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a riser.

CLINQUANT. adj. [French.] Dressed in embroidery, in spangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,

All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English.

Shakespeare.

To CLIP. v. a. [clippan, Saxon.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

He that before shunn'd her, to shun such harms,

Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms. Shd.

Here I clip

The anvil of my sword, and do contest

Hotly and nobly with thy love. Shakespeare.

O nation, that thou couldst remove

That Neptune's arms, who clippest thee about!

Shakespeare.

Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends; Tell them your feats.

Shakespeare.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,

Clip dead men's graves.

Shakespeare.

The male festereth on the back of the female clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Roy.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by enclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to dip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame.

Suckling.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.

But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,

Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryd.
If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them, Bentley.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew. Pope.

He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve. Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping. Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clips, but so. Shakespeare.

Mrs. Mayoreess clipped the king's English. Addison.

Even in London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clipt in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakespeare.

To CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may bear it

Under a cloak that is of any length. Shakespeare.
Their cloaks were cloth of silver, mix'd with gold. Dryden.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he only held the faster. Locke.

Nimble he rose, and cast his garment down;
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round. Pope.

2. A concealment; a cover.

Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness. Parr.

To CLOAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a cloak.

2. To hide; to conceal.

Most heavenly fair, in deed and view,
She by creation was, till she did fall;

CLOCKWORK. n. s. [from clock and work.]

Movements by weights or springs, like those of a clock.

So if unprejudic'd you scan

The goings of this clockwork, man;

You find a hundred movements made

By fine devices in his head:

But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,

That tells this being what's o'clock. Prior.

Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clockwork. Milton.

You look like a puppet moved by clockwork. Arbutnot.

CLOD. n. s. [club, Sax. a little hillock;]

klotte, Dutch.]

1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.

The earth that casteth up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casteth up a smaller clod. Bacon.

CLO

I'll cut up, as plows
Do barren lands, and strike together flints
And clods, th' ungrateful senate and the people.
Ben Jonson.

Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes,
The crumbling clods. Dryden.

Where once their sultan's horse has trod,
Grows neither grass, nor shrub, nor tree. Swift.

3. Any thing concreted together in a cluster.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice to dip up fish with their nets, light on swallows con-gealed in clods of a slimy substance; and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth restoreth them to life and flight. Garciv.

4. A lump, a mass of metal.

One at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton.

5. Any thing vile, base, and earthy; as the body of man compared to his soul.

And ye, high heav'ns, the temple of the gods!
In which a thousand torches, flaming bright,
Do burn; that to us, wretched earthly clods,
In dreadful darkness lend desired light. Spenser.

The spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod. Milton's Par. Lost.
How the purer spirit is united to this clod, is a knot too hard for our degraded intellects to untie.
Glanville.

In moral reflections there must be heat, as well as dry reason, to inspire this cold clod of clay which we carry about with us. Burnet.

6. A dull, gross, stupid fellow; a dolt.

The vulgar! a scarce animated clod,
Ne'er pleas'd with aught above 'em. Dryden.

To CLOD. v. n. [from the noun.] To

CLOUD. n. s. [The derivation is not known. Minshew derives it from claudo, to shut; Somner from clod; Casaubon from αἴω, darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,

In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shak.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air: where they remain suspended, till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist; or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain.

Grew's Cosmologia.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;
And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply.

Raccommen.

CLOVE-GILLYFLOWER. n. s. [from its smelling like cloves.]

This genus may be divided into three classes:
1. The clove-gillyflower, or carnation. 2. The pink. 3. The sweet William. The carnation or clove-gillyflower, are distinguished into four classes. The first, called flakes, having two colours only, and their stripes larger going quite through the leaves. The second, called bizars, have flowers striped, or variegated with three or four different colours. The third are piquettes: these flowers have always a white ground, and are spotted with scarlet, red, purple, or other colours. The fourth are called painted ladies: these have their petals of a red or purple colour on the upper side, and are white underneath. Of each of these classes there are numerous varieties. The true clove-gillyflower has been long in use for making a cordial syrup. There are two or three varieties commonly brought to the markets, which differ greatly in goodness; some having very little scent, when compared with the true sort.

 As the substance of coagulations is not more.

saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot.
COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. s. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of increasing, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbutnot.

COAL. n. s. [col, Saxon; kol, Germ. kole, Dutch; kul, Danish.] The common fossil fuel.

Coal is a black, sulphureous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fuel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called cannel, or canale coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes. Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforced, falls by her own consent; As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent.

Denham.
 We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whatsoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.
 You are no surer, no,
 Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
 Or hailstones in the sun. Shakspeare.

COAL-STONE. n. s. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. s. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coal is found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

COAL-WEY. n. s. [from coal.] A place where coal is dug.

Two fine stalactites were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery. Woodward.

TO COALESCE. v. n. [coalesco, Latin.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALESCENCE. n. s. [from coalesce.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. s. [from coalesco, coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glanville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'T is necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

COALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dee. Milt.

COAPTATION. n. s. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock, the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed, by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coarctation and ranging of the words. Broome.

To COARCT.

To COARCTATE. } v. a. [coarcto, Lat.]

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
 You will set cock a hoop! Shakspeare.

For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
 The field as certain as a gun,
 And having routed the whole troop,
 With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To COCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright, as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;
 O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears. Gay.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
 But 'Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

COCKMATCH. n. s. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatchers also.

Arbutnot and Pope.
COCKNEY. n. s. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, pais de cocaigne, for a country of dainties.

Paris est par un riche un pais de cocaigne. Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem :

Far in see by west Spayng,

Is a lond yhothe cocayng.

On which Dr. Hicks has this remark :

Nunc coquin, coquine : quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gulæ, et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem, significabant. Hinc urbanas, utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim cokaïnes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidiosi dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinae amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur ; monasteria & monasticam vitam in descriptione terræ cockaineæ parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' pasty alive. Shakspeare's K. Lear.
For who is such a cockney in his heart,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may Boast 't was his countryman that writ this play?

Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. Shakspeare.

CO'COA. n. s. [cacaotul, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure ; is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour ; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height : its bark rough, and full of tubercles ; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness ; when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cacao nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Medica.

Amid those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine. Thomson.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis, are coeval with the former. Bentley.

Silence, coeval with eternity!

Thou wert, ere nature first began to be: 'T was one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee! Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COGNITION. n. s. [cognitio, Latin.]

Knowledge; complete conviction.

I will not be myself, nor have cognition
Of what I feel: I am all patience. Shakspeare.

God, as he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all: not only in power, as under his subjection; or in his presence, as in his cognition;
but in their very essence, as in the soul of their causatives. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNITIVE. adj. [from cognitus, Latin.]

Having the power of knowing.

Unless the understanding employ and exercise its cognitive or apprehensive power about these terms, there can be no actual apprehension of them. South's Sermons.

COGNIZABLE. adj. [cognoscibilis, Fr.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.

2. Liable to be tried, judged, or examined.

Some are merely of ecclesiastical cognizance;

both in the ecclesiastical and secular courts.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

COGNIZANCE. n. s. [connaissance, Fr.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.

It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of.

L'Estrange.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. South.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addison.

2. A badge by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's servants stood, in a seemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow. Bacon.

These were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNO'MINAL. adj. [cognomen, Lat.]

Having the same name.

Nor do those animals more resemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth the constellations which pass under animal names in heaven;
nor the dog-fish at sea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or name-mate in the heavens. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINATION. n. s. [cognomen, Lat.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.

2. A name added from any accident or quality.

matters intelligible and cognoscible in things natural, may be applied to things artificial. Hale.

To COHA'BIT. v. n. [cohabito, Latin.]

1. To dwell with another in the same place.

The Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army: they were not able to cohabit with that holy thing. South.

2. To live together as husband and wife.

He knew her not to be his own wife, and yet had a design to cohabit with her as such. Fiddes.

COHA'BITANT. n. s. [from cohabit.] An inhabitant of the same place.

The oppressed Indians protest against that heaven where the Spaniards are to be their cohabitants. Ducy of Pidy.

COHABITA'TION. n. s. [from cohabit.]

1. The act or state of inhabiting the same place with another.

2. The state of living together as married persons.

Which defect, though it could not evacuate a marriage after cohabitation, and actual consummation, yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon's Henry VII.

Monsieur Brumars, at one hundred and two years, died for love of his wife, who was ninety-two at her death, after seventy years cohabitation. Tatler.

COHE'IR. n. s. [coberes, Lat.] One of several among whom an inheritance is divided.

Married persons, and widows, and virgins, are all coheirs in the inheritance of Jesus, if they live within the laws of their estate. Taylor.

COHE'IRESS. n. s. [from cobair.] A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with other women.To COHE'RE. v. n. [cobereo, Latin.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do co-bere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cober, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne's Philoa. Prin.

None want a place; for all, their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and cober'd around;
Not closer, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time cober'd with place, or place with wishing. Shakspeare.

4. To agree.

COHE'RENCE. } n. s. [cobarentia, Lat.]1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist division and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of, the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting-place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Cohærent of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke.

COHÉRENT. adj. [coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.

By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbutnot.

Where all must full, or not coherent, be;
And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope.

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter,
That time and place, with this deceit so lawful
May prove coherent. Shakespeare.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts.

COHÉSION. n. s. [from cohere.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles heaped together touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton.

Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find?
What props support, what chains the fabrick bind? Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion came to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHÉSIVE. adj. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHÉSIVENESS. n. s. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

TO COHIBIT. v. a. [cohibeo, Lat.] To restrain; to hinder. Dict.

TO COHOBATE. v. a. To pour the distilled liquor upon the remaining matter, and distil it again.

The juices of an animal body are, as it were, cobobated; being excreted, and admitted again into the blood with the fresh aliment. Arbutnot.

COHOBATION. n. s. [from cobobate.] A returning any distilled liquor again upon what it was drawn from, or upon fresh ingredients of the same kind, to have it the more impregnated with their virtues. Quincy.

Cobobation is the pouring the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again. Locke.

This oil, dulcified by cobobation with an aromatized spirit, is of use to restore the digestive faculty. Grew's Museum.

COHORT. n. s. [cohors, Latin.]

1. A troop of soldiers in the Roman armies, containing about five hundred foot.

The Romans levied as many cohorts, companies, and ensigns, from hence, as from any of their provinces. Camden.

2. [In poetical language.] A body of warriors.

Th' arch-angelic pow'r prepar'd
For swift descent; with him the cohorts bright
Of watchful cherubim. Milton.

Here Churchill, not so prompt
To vaunt as fight, his hardy cohorts join'd With Eugene. Philips' Blenheim.

COHORTATION. n. s. [cohortatio, Latin.]

Encouragement by words; incitement. Dict.

COIF. n. s. [coiffe, French; from cofe, for cucufa, low Latin.] The head-dress; a lady's cap; the serjeant's cap.

The judges of the four circuits in Wales, although they are not of the first magnitude, nor need be of the degree of the coif, yet are they considerable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

No less a man than a brother of the coif began his suit before he had been a twelvemonth at the Temple. Spenser.

Instead of home-spun coifs, were seen
Good pinnars edg'd with colbertine. Swift.

CO'IFED. adj. [from coif.] Wearing a coif.

CO'IFFURE. n. s. [coiffure, Fr.] Head-dress.

I am pleased with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shews the good sense of the valuable part of the sex. Addison.

COIGNE. n. s. [An Irish term, as it seems.]

Fitz Thomas of Desmond began that extortion of coigne and livery, and pay; that is, he and his army took horse-meat and man's meat, and money, at pleasure. Davies on Ireland.

COIGNE. n. s. [French.]

1. A corner.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed. Shakespeare.

2. A wooden wedge used by printers.

TO COIL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To gather into a narrow compass: as, to coil a rope, to wind it in a ring.

The lurking particles of air, so expanding themselves, must necessarily plump out the sides of the bladder, and so keep them turgid, until the pressure of the air, that at first coiled them, be re-admitted to do the same thing again. Boyle.

COIL. n. s. [kolleren, German.]

1. Tumult; turmoil; bustle; stir; hurry; confusion.

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason? Shakespeare's Temp.

You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you. Shakespeare.

In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. A rope wound into a ring.

COIN. n. s. [coigne, French.] A corner; any thing standing out angularly; a square brick cut diagonally: called often quoin, or quinc.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corrier stone? Shakespeare.

COIN. n. s. [by some imagined to come from cuneus, a wedge, because metal is cut in wedges to be coined.]

1. Money stamped with a legal impression.

He gave Barnabas a good sum of gold in ready coin, which Menalcas had bequeathed. Sidney.

You have made

Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

I cannot tell how the poets will succeed in the explication of coins, to which they are generally very great strangers. Addison.

She now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin. Pope.

1. Payment of any kind.

The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood, is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond.

To COIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

2. To mint or stamp metals for money.

They cannot touch me for coining; I am the king. Shakespeare.

They never put in practice a thing so necessary as coined money is. Peachment of Antiquities.

Tenants cannot coin rent just at quarter-day, but must gather it by degrees. Locke.

Can we be sure that this medal was really coined by an artificer, or is but a product of the soil from whence it was taken? Bentley.

3. To make or invent.

My lungs

Coin words till their decay, against those measles Which we disdain should tetter us. Shakespeare.

3. To make or forge any thing, in an ill sense.

Never coin a formal lye on't,
To make the knight o'ercome the giant. Hudib.

Those motives induced Virgil to coin his fable. Dryden.

Some tale, some new pretence, he daily coin'd,
To sooth his sister, and delude her mind. Dryd.

A term is coined to make the conveyance easy. Atterbury.

CO'INAGE. n. s. [from coin.]

1. The art or practice of coining money.

The care of the coinage was committed to the inferior magistrates; and I don't find that they had a publick trial, as we solemnly practise in this country. Arbutnot.

2. Coin; money; stamped and legitimated metal.

This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews; in derision of Christians, who first began that portrait. Brown.

Moor was forced to leave off coining, by the great crowds of people continually offering to return his coinage upon him. Swift.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. New production; invention.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden.

5. Forgery; invention.

This is the very coinage of your brain;
This bodiless creation, ecstasy
Is very cunning in. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To COINCIDE. v. n. [coincido, Lat.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.

If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth useless. Cheyne.

2. To concur; to be consistent with.

The rules of right judgment, and of good ratiocination, often coincide with each other. Watts's Logic.

CO'INCIDENCE. n. s. [from coincide.]

1. The state of several bodies, or lines, falling upon the same point.

An universal equilibrium, arising from the coincidence of infinite centers, can never be naturally acquired. Bentley.

2. Concurrence; consistency; tendency of many things to the same end; concurrence of many things at the same time.

The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences that contribute to the proof, carries a great weight. Hall.

3. It is followed by with.

The coincidence of the planes of this rooter with one another, and with the plane of the ecliptick, is very near the truth. Clype.

CO'INCIDENT. adj. [from coincide.]

1. Falling upon the same point.

These circles I viewed through a prism; and, as I went from them, they came nearer and nearer together, and at length became coincident. Newton's Optics.

2. Concurrent; consistent; equivalent; followed by with.

Christianity teaches nothing but what is perfectly suitable to and coincident with the ruling principles of a virtuous and well inclined man. Scott.

These words of our apostle are exactly coincident with that controverted passage in his discourse to the Athenians. Bridges.

COINDICATION. n. s. [from con and idico, Latin.] Many symptoms betokening the same cause.

CO'INER. n. s. [from coin.]

1. A maker of money; a minter; a stamp-er of coin.

My father was I know not where
When I was stamp'd: some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
It is easy to find designs that never entered into the thoughts of the sculptor or the painter. Addison on Architecture.

There are only two patents referred to, less advantageous to the coiner than this of Warr. Steuart.

2. A counterfeiter of the king's stamp; a maker of base money.

3. An inventor.

Dionysius, a Greek coiner of etymologies, is commended by Athenæus. Cameron's Roman.

The time they were out at coit, is like the like idle exercises. Carver's Survey of Cities.

COIT'ION. n. s. [coisio, Latin.]

1. Copulation; the act of generation.

I cannot but admire that philosophers should imagine frogs to fall from the clouds, conceiving how openly they act their coition, produce spawn, tadpoles, and frogs. Ray on the Creation.

He is not made productive of his kind, but by coition with a female. Grew's Car.

2. The act by which two bodies come together.

By Gilbertus this motion is termed coition, not made by any faculty attractive of one, but a syndrome and concurrence of each. Brown.

COKE. n. s. [perhaps from coquo, Latin.] Fewel made by burning pit-coal.

under earth, and quenching the cinders;
as charcoal is made with wood. It is frequently used in drying malt.

CO'LANDER. n. s. [colo, to strain, Lat.]
A sieve either of hair, twigs, or metal, through which a mixture to be separated is poured, and which retains the thicker parts; a strainer.

Take a thick woven osier colander,
Thro' which the pressed wines are strained clear.

All the viscera of the body are but as so many colanders to separate several juices from the blood.

The brains from nose and mouth, and either ear,
Come issuing forth, as through a colander.
The curdled milk.

COLA'TION. n. s. [from colo, Lat.] The Mechlin, the queen of lace, and Colbertine.

CO'LCOTHAR. n. s. A term in chymistry.
Colcothar is the dry substance which remains after distillation, but commonly the caput mor-tuum of vitriol.

Colcothar, or vitriol burnt, though unto a redness, containing the fixed salt, will make good ink.

COLD. adj. [colb, Saxon; kalt, Germ.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit.

The aggregated soil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote.

2. Causing sense of cold.

Some better shroud, some better warmth to cherish
Our limbs benumb'd, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter sere foment.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their forces, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile;
not acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting ardour.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books.

• Ascham.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.—Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous.

Shakespeare.

New dated letters these,
Their cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he wish his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword.

To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator.

Burnet's Preface to the Theory of the Earth.

No drum or trumpet needs
T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration.

6. Unaffected; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene.

7. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.

Let his knights have colder looks
Among you.

The commissioners grew more reserved, and colder towards each other.

8. Chaste; not heated by vitious appetite.

You may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink:

We've willing dames enough.

9. Not welcome; not received with kindness or warmth of affection.

My master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love.

10. Not hasty; not violent.

11. Not affecting the scent strongly.

At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault.

Not having the scent strongly affected.

Smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose.

COLD. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorifick power.

Fair lined slippers for the cold.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains: and, when all is done, we cannot attain it in any great degree.

The sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat Scarce tolerable; and from the north to call Deceitful winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; childness.

When she saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran shiv'ring to her heart. Dryd.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What disease hast thou? —
A whoreson cold, sir; a cough. Shakespeare.
Let no ungentle cold destroy
All taste we have of heavenly joy. Roscom.

Those rains, so covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation; which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

CO'LDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee. Shakespeare.
Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,
Nor would believe my lord had sent;
So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, Your servant, sir. Swift.

CO'LDNESS. n. s. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle's Exp.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denb.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotter prosecuted; forasmuch as coldness, which in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably construed. Hooker.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Arbutnot.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom!

Addison's Cato.
Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,
Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Prior.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope.

COLE. n. s. [capl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

CO'LESEED. n. s. [from cole and seed.]
Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but collected or barley, and then wheat. Mortimer.

CO'LEWORT. n. s. [caplþyrt, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them. Wiseman of an Erysipelas.

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot);
She stripp'd all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd.
Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below:
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

CO'LIC. n. s. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colic, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness: and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colic, which is pain in the bowels from flatulences and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities: and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. A hysterical colic, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colic, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colic, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys: and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbutnot.

CO'LIC. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colic pangs. Mit.

TO COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Latin.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

In consumptions and atrophy the liquids are exhausted, and the sides of the canals collapse, therefore the attrition is increased, and consequently the heat. Arbutnot on Diet.

COLLA'PSION. n. s. [from collapse.]

1. The act of closing or collapsing.

2. The state of vessels closed.

COLLAR. n. s. [collare, Latin.]

1. A ring of metal put round the neck.

That's nothing, says the dog, but the fretting of my collar; nay, says the wolf, if there be a collar in the case, I know better things than to sell my liberty. L'Estrange.

Ten brace and more of grey hounds;
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound.
And collars of the same their necks surround. Dry.

2. The part of the harness that is fastened about the horse's neck.

Her wagon spokes made of long spinners legs;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
The collars, of the moonshine's watry beams. Shakespeare.

3. The part of the dress that surrounds the neck.

4. To slip the COLLAR. To get free; to escape; to disentangle himself from any engagement or difficulty.

When, as the ape him heard so much to talk
Of labour, that did from his liking baulk,
He would have slipped the collar handsomely. Hubbard's Tale.

5. A COLLAR of BROWN, is the quantity bound up in one parcel.

COLLAR-BONE. n. s. [from collar and bone.] The clavicle; the bones on each side of the neck.

A page riding behind the coach fell down, bruised his face, and broke his right collar-bone.

Wiceman's Surgery.

To CO'LLAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To seize by the collar; to take by the throat.

2. To COLLAR beef, or other meat; to roll it up, and bind it hard and close with a string or collar.

To COLLATE. v. a. [confero, collatum, Latin.]

1. To compare one thing of the same kind with another.

Knowledge will be ever a wandering and indigested thing, if it be but a commixture of a few notions that are at hand and occur; and not excited from a sufficient number of instances, and those well collated.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They could not relinquish their Judaism, and embrace christianity, without considering, weighing, and collating both religions.

South.

2. To collate books; to examine if nothing be wanting.

3. To bestow; to confer.

The significance of the sacrament disposes the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God, there consigned, exhibited, and collated.

Taylor's Communicant.

4. With to. To place in an ecclesiastical benefice.

He thrust out the invader, and collated Amadorf to the benice: Luther performed the consecration.

Atterbury.

If a patron shall neglect to present unto a benefice, void above six months, the bishop may collate thereunto.

Ayliffe.

COLLATERAL. adj. [con and latus, Lat.]

1. Side to side.

In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Shak.

Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose
Of high collateral glory. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Running parallel.

3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection; and beget
Like of his like, his image multiply'd
In unly defective, which requires Collateral love and dearest amity.

Milton.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is, by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him ex latere, commonly styled collaterals, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by collateral hand
'They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
To you in satisfaction.

Shakespeare.

6. Concurrent,

All the force of the motive lies within itself:
it receives no collateral strength from external considerations.

Atterbury.

COLLATERALLY. adv. [from collateral.]

vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth. Hill on Fossils.

- CO'LOM. n. s. [κόλον, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction:
as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forbear to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long.

The colon begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound. Swift.
The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

CO'LO'NEL. n. s. [of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minsheu deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patriæ columnæ; exercitus columnæ. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally sounded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,

If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

CO'LO'NELSHIP. n. s. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.

To CO'LO'NIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Bacon's Holy War.

Druid bath advantage by acquiesce of islands, which she colonizeth and fortieth daily. Howel.

COLONNA'DE. n. s. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure; or a series of columns disposed in a circle, and insulated withinside. Builder's Dict.
Here circling colonnades the ground inclose,
And here the marble statues breathe in rows. Addison.

Turpentine and oils leave a colophony, upon a separation of their thinner oil. Floyer.

COLOQU'NTEDA. n. s. [colocynthis, Lat. κολοκυνθίς.] The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Both the seed and pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicine. Chambers.

CO'LO'RATE. adj. [coloratus, Lat.] Coloured; died; marked or stained with some colour.

Had the tunicles and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays from visible objects would have been stopt. Ray.

COLORA'TION. n. s. [coloro, Latin.]

1. The art or practice of colouring.

Some bodies have a more departable nature than others, as is evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a great quantity of brasil. Bacon.

2. The state of being coloured.

Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preeminence. Bacon's Natural Hist.

COLORI'FICK. adj. [colorificus, Latin.] That has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorific qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opticks.

COLO'SSE. } n. s. [colossus, Lat.] A COLO'SSUS. } statue of enormous magnitude.

Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or colosse of Rhodes. Temple.

There huge colossus rose, with trophies crown'd,
And Runick characters were grav'd around. Pope.

COLOSSE'AN. adj. [colossæus, Latin.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

CO'LOUR. n. s. [color, Latin.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Watts.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakspeare.
For though our eyes can nought but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one then another in this order ; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton.

2. The freshness, or appearance of blood, in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.
When each bold figure just begins to live,
The treach'rous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment ; palliation ; excuse ; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt ; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance ; pretence ; false show.

Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer. Shakspeare.
Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship laden with corn ; under the colour of the sale whereof, they noted all that was done in the city. Knolles' History of the Turks.

7. Kind ; species ; character.

Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shakspeare's As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard ; an ensign of war : they say the colours of the foot, and standard of the horse.

He at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long. Shakspeare's Richard II.

Against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire. Shakspeare.

The banks were filled with companies, passing all along the river under their colours, with trumpets sounding. Knolles.

Of Priam's royal race my mother came. Dryd.
Self-love is so natural an infirmity, that it makes us partial even to those that come of us, as well as ourselves.

L'Estrange.

35. To COME of. To proceed, as effects from their causes.

Will you please, sir, be gone ;
I told you what would come of this.

Shakspeare.

The hicough comes of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach.

Bacon.

This comes of judging by the eye, without consulting the reason.

L'Estrange.

My young master, whatever comes on 't, must have a wife looked out for him by that time he is of age.

Locke.

36. To COME off. To deviate ; to depart from a rule or direction.

The figure of a bell partaketh of the pyramid,
but yet coming off and dilating more suddenly.

Bacon's Natural History.

37. To COME off. To escape ; to get free.

I knew the soul enchanter, though disguis'd ;
Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
And yet came off.

Milton.

How thou wilt here come off, surmounts my reach.

Milton.

If, upon such a fair and full trial, he can come off, he is then clear and innocent.

South.

Those that are in any signal danger implore his aid ; and, if they come off safe, call their deliverance a miracle.

Addison.

38. To COME off. To end an affair ; to take good or bad fortune.

Oh, bravely came we off,
When with a volley of our needless shot,
After such bloody toil, we bid good-night. Shaks.

Ever since Spain and England have had any thing to debate one with the other, the English, upon all encounters, have come off with honour and the better.

Bacon.

We must expect sometimes to come off by the worst, before we obtain the final conquest. Calamy.

He oft, in such attempts as these,
Came off with glory and success.

Hudibras.

39. To COME off from. To leave ; to forbear.

To come off from these grave disquisitions, I would clear the point by one instance more.

Felton on the Classics.

progress.

Things seem to come on apace to their former state.

Bacon.

There was in the camp both strength and victual sufficient for the obtaining of the victory, if they would not protract the war until winter were come on.

Kneller's History.

The sea came on, the south with mighty roar Dispers'd and dash'd the rest upon the rocky shore.

Dryden.

So travellers, who waste the day,
Noting at length the setting sun,
They mend their pace as night comes on.

Grave.

41. To COME on. To advance to combat.

The great ordnance once discharged, the armies came fast on, and joined battle.

Kneller.

Rhymer, come on, and do the worst you can ;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man.

Dryden.

42. To COME on. To thrive ; to grow big ; to grow.

Come on, poor babe ;
Some powerful spirit instruct the kites and ravens
To be thy nurses. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
It should seem by the experiments, both of the malt and of the roses, that they will come far faster on in water than in earth ; for the nourishment is easier drawn out of water than out of earth.

Bacon's Natural History.

43. To COME over. To repeat an act.

44. To COME over. To revolt.

They are perpetually teizing their friends to come over to them.

Addison's Spectator.

A man, in changing his side, not only makes himself hated by those he left, but is seldom heartily esteemed by those he comes over to.

Addison's Spectator.

45. To COME over. To rise in distillation.

Perhaps also the phlegmatick liquor, that is wont to come over in this analysis, may, at least as to part of it, be produced by the operation of the fire. Boyle.

In times to come,
My waves shall wash the walls of mighty Rome. Dryden.

Taking a lease of land for years to come, is the rent of one hundred pounds. L...

60. COME is a word of which the use is various and extensive, but the radical signification of tendency thitherward is uniformly preserved. When we say it came from a place, the idea is that of returning, or arriving, or becoming nearer; when we say, he went from a place, we conceive simply departure, or removal to a greater distance. The better comes; it is passing from its former state to that which is desired; it is advancing toward us.

COME. [participle of the verb.]

Thy words were heard, and I am come to thy words. Daniel.

COME. A particle of exhortation; be quick; make no delay.

Come, let us make our father drink wine. Genesis.

COME. A particle of reconciliation, of incitement to it.

Come, come, at all I laugh he laughs no doubt; The only difference is, I dare laugh out. Pope.

COME. A kind of adverbial word for which it shall come: as, come Wednesday, when Wednesday shall come.

Come Candlemas, nine years ago she died. G...

COME, n. s. [from the verb.] A sprout; a cant term.

That the malt is sufficiently well dried, we may know both by the taste, and also by the falling off of the come or sprout. Merkant.

COMEDIAN, n. s. [from comedy.]

1. A player or actor of comick parts.

2. A player in general; a stageplayer; an actress or actor.

Melissarion, pretty honey-bee, when of a comedian she became a wealthy man's wife, was saluted madam Pithias, or Prudence. Gambel's Romaine.

3. A writer of comedies.

Scaliger willeth us to admire Plautus as a comedian, but Terence as a pure and elegant speaker. Peacham of Poetry.

COMEDY, n. s. [comedia, Lat.] A dramatick representation of the lighter faults of mankind, with an intention to make vice and folly ridiculous; opposed to tragedy.

Your honour's players

Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shakespeare.

A long, exact, and serious comedy;

In every scene some moral let it teach,
And, if it can, at once both please and preach.

Pope.

COM'ELINESS. n. s. [from comely.] Grace; beauty; dignity. It signifies something less forcible than beauty, less elegant than grace, and less light than pretiness.

A careless comeliness with comely care. Sidney.

The service of God hath not such perfection of grace and comeliness as when the dignity of the place doth concur.

Hooker.

'They skilled not of the goodly ornaments of poetry, yet were sprinkled with some pretty flowers, which gave good grace and comeliness.

Spenser on Ireland.

Hardly shall you meet with man or woman so aged or ill-favoured, but, if you will commend them for comeliness, nay and for youth too, shall take it well.

South.

There is great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits, of plants.

Roy on the Creation.

A horseman's coat shall hide

Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side. Prior.

COMELY. adj. [from become; or from cpeman, Sax. to please.]

1. Graceful; decent; having dignity or grandeur of mien or look. Comeliness seems to be that species of beauty which excites respect rather than pleasure.

If the principal part of beauty is in decent motion, no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable: for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness.

Bacon.

He that is comely when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young.

South.

Thou art a comely, young, and valiant knight.

Dryden.

2. Used of things: decent; according to propriety.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely Evensoms him that bears it! Shakespeare.

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

COMELY. adv. [from the adjective.] Handsomely; gracefully.

To ride comely, to play at all weapons, to dance comely, be very necessary for a courtly gentleman.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

COMER. n. s. [from come.] One that comes.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;

But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.

Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shakespeare.

Plants move upwards; but, if the sap puts up too fast, it maketh a slender stalk, which will not support the weight; and therefore these are all swift and hasty comers.

Bacon.

It is natural to be kind to the last comer.

L'Estrange.

Now leave those joys, unsuited to thy age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage. Dryden.

The renowned champion of our lady of Lore, &c. and the miraculous translation of her chapel; about which he hath published a defiance to the world, and offers to prove it against all comers.

Stillingfleet.

'There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer.

Locke.

House and heart are open for a friend; the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer.

South.

COMET. n. s. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus, when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtilest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

Trevoux. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy? Shakespeare.

Such his tell glances as the fatal light
Of starting comets.

Crashaw.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright.

Prior.

CO'METARY. } adj. [from comet.] Relat-COM'ETICK. } ing to a comet.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe. Cheyne.

CO'MFIT. n. s. [bellaria arida, Latin; konfit, Dutch. It should seem that both are formed by hasty pronunciation from confect] A dry sweetmeat; any kind of fruit or root preserved with sugar, and dried.

By feeding me on beans and pease,

He crams in nasty crevices,

And turns to comfits by his arts,

To make me relish for desserts.

Hudibras.

To CO'MFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve dry with sugar.

The fruit that does so quickly waste,

Men scarce can see it, much less taste,

Thou comfist in streets to make it last. Cowley.

CO'MFITURE. n. s. [from comfit, or con- fecture.] Sweetmeat.

From country grass to comfitures of court,

Or city's quelque-choses, let not report

My mind transport.

Donne.

To CO'MFORT. v. a. [comforto, low Latin. Salvia confortat nervos. Schol.
Sal.]

1. To strengthen; to enliven; to invigorate.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason, concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same. Hooker.

Light excelleth in comforting the spirits of men; light varied doth the same effect, with more novelty. This is the cause why precious stones comfort. Bacon's Nat. History.

Some of the abbots have been guilty of com- forting and assisting the rebels. Aylmer's Parerg.

2. To console; to strengthen the mind under the pressure of calamity.

They bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him. Job.

CO'MFORT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Support; assistance; countenance.

Poynings made a wild chace upon the wild Irish; where, in respect of the mountains and fastnesses, he did little good, which he would needs impute unto the comfort that the rebels should receive underhand from the earl of Kildare. Bacon.

The king did also appoint commissioners for the fining of all such as were of any value, and had any hand or partaking in the aid or comfort of Perkins, or the Cornishmen. Bacon.

2. Consolation; support under calamity or danger.

Her soul heaven's queen, whose name she bears,

In comfort of her mother's fears,

Hath plac'd among her virgin train. Ben Jonson.

As they have no apprehension of those things,
so they need no comfort against them. Tillotson.

3. That which gives consolation or support in calamity.

I will keep her ignorant of her good,

To make her heav'nly comforts of despair

When it is least expected. Shakspeare.

Your children were vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shaks.

We need not fear

To pass commodiously this life, sustain'd
By him with many comforts; till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Miln.

CO'MFORTABLE. adj. [from comfort.]

1. Receiving comfort; susceptible of comfort; cheerful; of persons. Not in use.

His comfortable temper has forsook him:

He is much out of health. Shaks. Tim.

2. Admitting comfort; of condition.

What can promise him a comfortable appearance before his dreadful judge? Shaks.

3. Dispensing comfort; having the power of giving comfort.

He had no brother; which, though it be com- fortable for kings to have, yet draweth the subjects eyes aside. Bacon's Henry VII.

The lives of many miserable men were saved and a comfortable provision made for their sussistence. Dryden's Fab. Dedicator.

CO'MFORTABLY. adv. [from comfortable.]
In a comfortable manner; with cheerfulness; without despair.

Upon view of the sincerity of that performance, hope comfortably and cheerfully for God's performance. Hamilton.

CO'MFORTER. n. s. [from comfort.]

1. One that administers consolation in misfortunes; one that strengthens and supports the mind in misery or danger.

This very prayer of Christ obtained angels to be sent him, as comforters in his agony. Hooker.

The heav'n have blest you with a goodly set.

To be a comforter when he is gone. Shakspeare.

Nineveh is laid waste, who will bemoan her?
whence shall I seek comforters for thee? Nah.

2. The title of the Third Person of the Holy Trinity.

CO'MFORTLESS. adj. [from comfort.]

Wanting comfort; being without any thing to allay misfortune: used of persons as well as things.

ing it by your sentence. Shaks.

Where was a cave, ywrought with wood and art,

Deep, dark, uneasy, doleful, comfortless.

Fairy Queen.

News fitting to the night;

Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible. Shaks.

On thy feet thou stood'st at last.

Though comfortless, as when a father mourns

His children all in view destroy'd at once. Miln.

That unsociable comfortless deadness had not quite tired me. Shaks.

CO'MFREY. n. s. [consolida, Lat. comfrey, French.] A plant. Miln.

CO'MICAL. adj. [comicus, Latin.]

1. Raising mirth; merry; diverting.

The greatest resemblance of our author is in the familiar stile and pleasing way of relating comical adventures of that nature. Dryden's Fab.

Something so comical in the voice and gesture that a man can hardly forbear being pleased. Addison on Lully.

2. Relating to comedy; befitting comedy;
not tragical.

That all might appear to be knit up in the conclusion, the duke's daughter was joined in marriage to the lord Lisle. Shaks.

They deny it to be tragical, because the strophe is a wedding, which hath ever been counted comical.

COMICALLY. adv. [from comical.]

1. In such a manner as raises mirth.

2. In a manner befitting comedy.

COMICALNESS. n. s. [from comical.]

The quality of being comical; the power of raising mirth.

COMICK. adj. [comicus, Lat. comique, French.]

1. Relating to comedy; not tragick.

I never yet the tragick muse essay'd,
Deterr'd by thy inimitable maid;
And when I venture at the comick style,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock thy toil. Waller.
A comick subject loves an humble verse;
Thyestes scorns a low and comick style;
Yet comedy sometimes may raise her voice.

Recommend.

Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep. Dryden.

a. Raising mirth.

Stately triumphs, mirthful comick shows,
Such as befit the pleasure. Shakespeare.

COMING. n. s. [from To come.]

My coming, seen far off? Milt. Par. Lost.

Sweet the coming on

Of grateful evening mild. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. The state of being come; arrival.

May't please you, noble madam, to withdraw
Into your private chamber; we shall give you
The full cause of our coming. Shakespeare.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others.

Locke.

COMING-IN. n. s. Revenue; income.

Here's a small trifle of wives; eleven widows and nine maids is a simple coming-in for one man. Shakespeare.

What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth!

What is thy toll, O adoration? Shakespeare.

COMING. participial adj. [from come.]

a. Fond; forward; ready to come.

Now will I be your Rosalind in a more coming on disposition; and, ask me what you will, I will grant it. Shakespeare.

That very lapidary himself, with a coming tomach, and in the cock's place, would have made the cock's choice. L'Estrange.

That he had been so affectionate a husband, was no ill argument to the coming dowager. Dry.

On morning wings, how active springs the mind!

How easy every labour it pursues,
How coming to the poet ev'ry muse! Pope.

b. Future; yet to come.

Praise of great acts he scatters, as a seed
Which may the like in coming ages breed. Ross.

to shew the exact proportions between concordances. Harris.

TO COMMA'ND. v. a. [commander, Fr.
mando, Lat.]

1. To govern; to give orders to; to hold in subjection or obedience: correlative to obey.

Look, this feather,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shak.
Christ could command legions of angels to his rescue. Decay of Piety.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee
now,

With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To serve dutie. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5.

The queen commands, and we'll obey,
Over the hills and far away. Old Song.

2. To order; to direct to be done: contrary to prohibit.

My conscience bids me ask, wherefore you have

Commanded of me these most pois'nous compounds. Shakespeare.

We will sacrifice to the Lord our God, as he shall command us. Exodus.

Whatever hypocrites austerely talk
Of purity, and place, and innocence;
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all.
Our maker bids increase: who bids abstain
But our destroyer, foe to God and man? Milton.

3. To have in power.

If the strong cane support thy walking hand,
Chairmen no longer shall the wall command. Gay.

4. To overlook; to have so subject as that it may be seen or annoyed.

Up to the Eastern tower,
Whose height commands as subjects all the vale,
To see the sight. Shakespeare.

His eye might there command wherever stood
City, of old or modern fame, the seat
Of mightiest empire. Milish.

One side commands a view of the finest garden in the world. Addison's Guardian.

5. To lead as a general.

Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO COMMA'ND. v. n. To have the supreme authority; to possess the chief power;
to govern.

Those two commanding powers of the soul, the understanding and the will. South.

COMMA'ND. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The right of commanding; power; supreme authority. It is used in military affairs, as magistracy or government in civil life: with over.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet my soldiers are in my command. Shak.
With lightning fill her awful hand,
And make the clouds seem all at her command. Waller.

He assumed an absolute command over his readers. Dryden.

2. Cogent authority; despotism.

Command and force may often create, but can never cure, an aversion; and whatever anyone is brought to by compulsion, he will leave as soon as he can. Locke on Education.

3. The act of commanding; the mandate uttered; order given.

P p

Of this tree we may not taste nor touch;
God so commanded, and left that command
Sole daughter of his voice. Milt. Par. Lost.
As there is no prohibition of it, so no command
for it. Taylor.

The captain gives command; the joyful train Glide through the gloomy shade, and leave the main. Dryden.

Ray.

It is manifest, by this experiment, that the commixed impressions of all the colours do stir up and beget a sensation of white; that is, that whiteness is compounded of all the colours.

Newton's Opticks.

COMMIXION. } n. s. [from commix.]

COMMIXTION. } Mixture; incorporation of different ingredients.

Were thy commixion Greek and Trojan, so That thou could'st say, This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cressida.

Some species there be of middle and participating natures, that is, of birds and beasts, as bats, and some few others, so confirmed and set together, that we cannot define the beginning of end of either; there being a commixtion of both in the whole, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vul. Err.

COMMIXTURE. n. s. [from commix.]

1. The act of mingling; the state of being mingled; incorporation; union in one mass.

In the commixture of any thing that is more oily or sweet, such bodies are least apt to putrefy, the air working little upon them.

Bacon.

2. The mass formed by mingling different things; composition; compound.

Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in the bud,
Or angels veil'd in clouds; are roses blown,
Dismiss'd, their damask sweet commixtures shewn.

My love and fear glew'd many friends to thee;
And now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt, Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud York.

Shakspeare.

There is scarcely any rising but by a commixture of good and evil arts.

Bacon.

All the circumstances and respect of religion and state intermix'd together, in their commixture will better become a royal history, or a council-table than a single life.

Wotton.

COMMODE. n. s. [French.] The head-dress of women.

Let them reflect how they would be affected, should they meet with a man on horseback, in his breeches and jack-boots, dressed up in a commode and a night-trail.

Spectator.

She has contrived to shew her principles by the setting of her commode; so that it will be impossible for any woman that is disaffected to be in the fashion.

Addison's Freeholder.

She, like some pensive statesman, walks demure,

And smiles, and hugs, to make destruction sure;
Or under high commodes, with looks erect,
Barefac'd devours, in gaudy colours deck'd.

Granville.

COMMODIOUS. adj. [commodus, Lat.]

1. Convenient; suitable; accommodate to any purpose; fit; proper; free from hindrance or uneasiness.

Such a place cannot be commodious to live in; for, being so near the moon, it had been too near the sun.

their own commodity, yet, if this were done with injury unto others, it was not to be suffered.
Hooker.

Commodity, the bias of the world:
The world, which of itself is poised well,
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This way of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifference,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent.
Shakespeare's King John.

After much debatement of the commodities or discommodities like to ensue, they concluded.
Heyward.

2. Convenience; particular advantage.

There came into her head certain verses, which,
if she had had present commodity, she would have adjoined as a retraction to the other. Sidney.

She demanded leave not to lose this long sought for commodity of time, to ease her heart. Sidney.

Travellers turn out of the highway, draw either by the commodity of a foot-path, or the delicacy or the freshness of the fields. Ben Jonson.

It had been difficult to make such a mole where they had not so natural a commodity as the earth of Puzzuola, which immediately hardens in the water. Addison on Italy.

3. Wares; merchandise; goods for traffic.

All my fortunes are at sea;
Nor have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum. Shakespeare.

Commodities are moveables, valuable by money, the common measure. Locke.

Of money, in the commerce and traffick of mankind, the principal use is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities.

These three to kings and chiefs their scenes display,
The rest before th' ignoble commons play. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can: the nobler sort,
With winding doors wide open, front the court. Dryden.

2. The lower house of parliament, by which the people are represented, and of which the members are chosen by the people.

My good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty Incline to it, or no? Shakespeare's Henry vi.
In the house of commons many gentlemen, unsatisfied of his guilt, darst not condemn him.
King Charles.

took his commons with the pigeons. L'Estrange.
Mean while she quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a leaten sallad cool'd her blood:
Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant;
Nor did their minds an equal banquet want.
Dryden.

The doctor now obeys the summons,
Likes both his company and commons. Swift.
COMMONWE'AL. } n. s. [from common COMMONWE'ALTH.} and weal, or wealtb.]

1. A polity; an established form of civil life.

Two foundations bear up public societies:
the one inclination, whereby all men desire sociable life; the other an order agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together: the latter is that which we call the law of a commonwealth. Hooker.

It was impossible to make a commonweal in Ireland, without settling of all the estates and possessions throughout the kingdom. Davies.
A continual parliament would but keep the commonweal in tune, by preserving laws in their vigour. King Charles.

There is nobody in the commonwealth of learning who does not profess himself a lover of truth. Locke.

2. The public; the general body of the people.

Bare communion with a good church, can never alone make a good man; if it could, we should have no bad ones. South.

Ingenious men have lived and died in the communion of that church. Stillingfleet.

COMMUNITY. n. s. [communis, Latin.]

2. The commonwealth; the body polittick.

*How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
But by degrees and in authentick place? Shaks.
Not in a single person only, but in a community or multitude of men. Hammond.*

This parable may be aptly enough expounded of the laws that secure a civil community.

*L'Estrange.
It is not designed for her own use, but for the whole community. Addison.*

The love of our country is impressed on our mind, for the preservation of the community.

*Addison's Freeholder.
He lives not for himself alone, but hath a regard in all his actions to the great community. Atterbury.*

3. Common possession; the state contrary to property or appropriation.

*Sit up and revel;
Call all the great, the fair, and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee; and begin a fashion
Of freedom and community. Ben Jonson.*

The undistinction of many in the community of name, or misapplication of the act of one unto the other, hath made some doubt thereof.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This text is far from proving Adam sole proprietor; it is a confirmation of the original community of all things.

3. Frequency; commonness. Not in use.

*He was but, as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze. Shakspeare.*

COMMUTABILITY: n. s. [from commutabile.] The quality of being capable of exchange.

COMMUTABLE. adj. [from commute.] That may be exchanged for something else; that may be bought off, or ransomed.

COMMUTATION. n. s. [from commute.]

3. Change; alteration.

An innocent nature could hate nothing that was innocent: in a word, so great is the commutation, that the soul then hated only that which now only it loves, i. e. sin. South's Sermons.

3. Exchange; the act of giving one thing for another.

The whole universe is supported by giving and returning; by commerce and commutation. South.

According to the present temper of mankind, it is absolutely necessary that there be some method and means of commutation, as that of money.

The use of money, in the commerce and traffick of mankind, is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbuthnot.

3. Ransom; the act of exchanging a corporal for a pecuniary punishment.

The law of God had allowed an evasion; that is, by way of commutation or redemption. Brown.

COMMUTATIVE. adj. [from commute.] Relative to exchange: as, commutative justice, that honesty which is exercised in traffick, and which is contrary to fraud in bargains.

To COMMUTE. v. a. [commuto, Lat.]

2. To exchange; to put one thing in the place of another; to give or receive one thing for another.

This will commute our tasks: exchange these pleasant and gainful ones, which God assigns to those uneasy and fruitless ones we impose on ourselves. Decay of Piety.

2. To buy off, or ransom one obligation by another.

Some commute swearing for whoring; as if forbearance of the one were a dispensation for the other. L'Estrange.

To COMMUTE. v. n. To atone; to bargain for exemption.

Those institutions which God designed for means to further men in holiness, they lay upon as a privilege to serve instead of it, and to commute for it. South's Sermons.

COMMUTUAL. adj. [com and mutual.] Mutual; reciprocal. Used only in poetry.

Love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands Unite commutual in most sacred bands. South.

There, with commutual zeal, we both had strove

*In acts of dear benevolence and love;
Brothers in peace, not rivals in command. Pope.*

COMPACT. n. s. [pactum, Lat.] A contract; an accord; an agreement; a mutual and settled appointment between two or more, to do or to forbear something. It had anciently the accent on the last syllable.

*I hope the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm and true in me. Shaks.*

In the beginnings of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such words, voices, or gestures, should be signs whereby they would express their thoughts. Newton.

To COMPACT. v. a. [compingo, compactum, Latin.]

1. To join together with firmness; to unite closely; to consolidate.

*Inform her full of my particular fears:
And thereto add such reasons of your own,
As may compact it more. Shaks. King Lear
Nor are the nerves of his compacted strength
Stretch'd and dissolv'd into unsinew'd length. Deben.*

*By what degrees this earth's compacted sphere
Was harden'd, woods, and rocks, and towns, were born. Ray.*

This disease is more dangerous as the souls are more strict and compacted, and consequently more so as people are advanced in age. Arbuthnot.

Now the bright sun compacts the precious stone,

Imparting radiant lustre like his own. Milton.

2. To make out of something.

*If he, compact of jars, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres. Shakspeare.*

3. To league with.

*Thou pernicious woman,
Compact with her that's gone! think'st thou thy oaths,
Tho' they would swear down each particular fact,
Were testimonies? Shakspeare.*

4. To join together; to bring into a system.

We see the world so compacted, that each thing preserveth other things, and also itself. Hook.

COMPACT. adj. [compactus, Lat.]

1. Firm; solid; close; dense; of firm texture.

Is not the density greater in free and open spaces, void of air and other grosser bodies, than within the pores of water, glass, crystal, &c. and other compact bodies? Newton's Opticks.

Without attraction, the dissevered particles of the chaos could never convene into such great compact masses as the planets. Bentley.

3. Composed; consisting.
The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact. Shakespeare.

A wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
And the cold environs around condenses, Kindled through agitation to a flame. Milton.

3. Joined; held together.
In one hand Pan has a pipe of seven reeds, compact with wax together. Peacham.

4. Brief, and well connected: as, a compact discourse.

Where a foreign tongue is elegant, expressive, close, and compact, we must study the utmost force of our language. Fulton.

- COMPACTEDNESS. n. s. [from compact.]

Firmness; density.
Sticking or compactness, being natural to density, requires some excess of gravity in proportion to the density, or some other outward violence, to break it. Digby on Bodies.

These atoms are supposed infrangible, extremely compacted, and hard; which compacted-ness and hardness is a demonstration that nothing could be produced by them. Cbryne.

- COMPACTLY. adv. [from compact.]

1. Closely; densely.
2. With neat joining; with good com-pacture.

- COMPACTNESS. n. s. [from compact.]
Firmness; closeness; density.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this, for it cometh short of their compactness and durability. Brown.

The best lime mortar will not have attained its utmost compactness, till fourscore years after it has been employed in building. This is one reason why, in demolishing ancient fabrics, it is easier to break the stone than the mortar.

Boyle.
The rest, by reason of the compactness of terrestrial matter, cannot make its way to wells.

- COMPACTURE. n. s. [from compact.] Structure; manner in which any thing is joined together; compagination. A good word, but not in use.

And over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong, Neither unseemly short, nor yet exceeding long. Fairy Queen.

- COMPAGES. n. s. [Latin.] A system of many parts united.

The organs in animal bodies are only a regu-

but companionable and respective. Bacon.

- COMPANION. n. s. [from compagnon, Fr.]

1. One with whom a man frequently con-verses, or with whom he shares his hours of relaxation. It differs from friend, as acquaintance from confidence.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companions make! Shak.
Some friend is a companion at the table, and will not continue in the day of thy affliction.

Eccles.
With anxious doubts, with raging passions torn,
No sweet companion near with whom to mourn.

- Prior.*
2. A partner; an associate.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Philippians.

Bereav'd of happiness, thou may'st partake
His punishment, eternal misery;
Which would be all his solace and revenge,

3. A familiar term of contempt; a fellow.
I scorn you, scurvy companion! What? you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linnen mate!

away, you mouldy rogue, away! Shakespeare.

It gives boldness to every petty companion to spread rumours to my defamation, where I cannot be present. Raleigh.

- COMPANIONABLE. adj. [from companion.] Fit for good fellowship; social;
agreeable.

He had a more companionable wit, and swayed more among the good fellows. Clarendon.

1. Company; train.
Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,
All of companionship. Shakespeare's Timon.

2. Fellowship; association.

If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, which, for your best ends,
You call your policy; how is 't less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour as in war? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

- COMPANY. n. s. [from compagnie, French; either from con and pagus, one of the same town; or con and panis, one that eats of the same mess.]

1. Persons assembled together; a body of men.

Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;
Take all his company along with him. Shak.

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife.

2. Persons assembled for the entertainment of each other; an assembly of pleasure.

A crowd is not company; and faces are but a gallery of pictures, where there is no love.

- Bacon's Essays.*
3. Persons considered as assembled for conversation; or as capable of conversation and mutual entertainment.

Monsieur Zulichem came to me among the rest of the good company of the town. Temple.

1. An author; a writer.

Now will be the right season of forming them to be able writers and composers in every excellent matter. Milton.

If the thoughts of such authors have nothing in them, they at least do no harm, and shew 'em honest industry, and a good intention in the composer. Addison's Freeholder.

2. He that adapts the musick to words; he that forms a tune.

For the truth of the theory I am in no wise embarrassed; the composer of it must look to that.

Woodward.

For composition, I prefer part Ludovico, a most judicious and sweet composer. Praetor.

This composer has so expressed my sense, where I intended to move the passions, that he seems to have been the poet as well as the composer.

Dryden.

COMPOSITE. adj. [compositus, Latin.]

The composite order in architecture is the last of the five orders of columns; so named, because its capital is composed out of those of the other orders: and it is also called the Roman and Italick order. Harris.

Some are of opinion, that the composite pillars of this arch were in imitation of the pillars of Solomon's temple. Addison.

COMPOSITION. n. s. [compositio, Latin.]

1. The act of forming an integral of various dissimilar parts.

We have exact forms of composition, whereby they incorporate almost as they were natural simples. Bacon's New Atlantis.

In the time of the Yncas reign of Peru, no composition was allowed by the laws to be used in point of medicine, but only simples proper to each disease. Temple.

2. The act of bringing simple ideas into complication: opposed to analysis, or the separation of complex notions.

The investigation of difficult things by the method of analysis, ought ever to precede the method of composition. Newton's Optics.

3. A mass formed by mingling different ingredients.

Heat and vivacity, in age, is an excellent composition for business. Bacon's Essays.

Vast pillars of stone, cased over with a composition that looks the most like marble of any thing one can imagine. Addison.

Jove mix'd up all, and his best clay employ'd,
Then call'd the happy composition Floyd. Swift.

4. The state of being compounded; united; conjunction; combination.

natures, and afterwards view them in composition with other things. Watts.

5. The arrangement of various figures in a picture.

The disposition in a picture is an assembling of many parts; it is also called the composition, by which is meant the distribution and orderly placing of things, both in general and in particular. Dryden's Deserv.

6. Written work.

Writers are divided concerning the authority of the greater part of those compositions that pass in his name. L'Estrange.

That divine prayer has always been looked upon as a composition fit to have proceeded from the wisest of men. Addison.

When I read rules of criticism, I enquire after the works of the author, and by that means discover what he likes in a composition. Addison.

7. Adjustment; regulation.

A preacher, in the invention of matter, election of words, composition of gesture, look, pronunciation, motion, useth all these faculties at once. Ben Jonson's Disc.

8. Compact; agreement; terms on which differences are settled.

To take away all such mutual grievances, injuries, and wrongs, there was no way but only by going upon composition and agreement amongst themselves. And again, all publick regiment, of what kind soever, seemeth evidently to have arisen from deliberate advice, consultation, and composition between men, judging it convenient and profitable. Hobbes.

Thus we are agreed;

I crave our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us. Shakspeare.

Their courage droops; and, hopeless now,
they wish

For composition with the unconquer'd fish. Waller.

9. The act of discharging a debt by paying part; the sum paid.

—Indeed they are disproportion'd. Shakspeare.

11. [In grammar.] The joining of two words together; or the prefixing a particle to another word, to augment, diminish, or change its signification.

12. A certain method of demonstration in mathematics, which is the reverse of the analytical method, or of resolution. It proceeds upon principles in themselves self-evident; on definitions, postulates, and axioms, and a previously demonstrated series of propositions, step by step, till it gives a clear knowledge of the thing to be demonstrated. This is called the synthetical method, and is used by Euclid in his Elements. Harris.

COMPO'SITIVE. adj. [from compose.] Compounded; or, having the power of compounding. Dict.

COMPO'SITOR. n. s. [from compose.] He that ranges and adjusts the types in printing: distinguished from the pressman, who makes the impression upon paper.

COMPOST. n. s. [Fr. compositum, Lat.] A mixture of various substances for enriching the ground; manure.

Avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
We also have great variety of composts and soils, for the making of the earth fruitful.

Bacon's Atlantis.
Water young planted shrubs; ammonium especially, which you can hardly refresh too often, and it requires abundant compost. Euclypn.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carried compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.

In vain the nursing grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with fester earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

To COMPO'ST. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure; to enrich with soil.

By removing into worse earth, or forbearing to compost the earth, water-mint turneth into field-mint, and the colewort into rape. Bacon.

As for earth, it composeth itself; for I knew a garden that had a field poured upon it, and it did bear fruit excellently. Bacon.

COMPO'STURE. n. s. [from compost.] Soil; manure. Not used.

The earth 's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stol'n
From gen'ral excrements. Shakspeare's Timon.

COMPO'SURE. n. s. [from compose.]

1. The act of composing or inditing.
Their own forms are not like to be so sound,
Or comprehensive of the nature of the duty, as forms of publick composure. K. Charles.

2. Arrangement; combination; mixture; order.

Hence languages arise; when, by institution and agreement, such a composure of letters, such a word, is intended to signify such a certain thing. Holder's Elements of Speech.

From the various composures and combinations of these corpuscles together, happen all the varieties of the bodies formed out of them.

Woodward.

In composure of his face,
Liv'd a fair but manly grace. Cranbow.

4. Frame; make; temperament.

To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With slaves that smell of sweat; say this becomes him:

As his composure must be rare indeed,
Whom these things cannot blemish. Shakspeare.

The duke of Buckingham sprung, without any help, by a kind of congenial composure, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master.

Wotton.

5. Adjustment.

God will rather look to the inward raptures of the mind, than to the outward form and composure of the body. Duppa.

6. Composition; framed discourse.

Discourses on such occasions are seldom the productions of leisure, and should be read with those favourable allowances that are made to hasty composures. Atterbury.

In the composures of men, remember you are a man as well as they; and it is not their reason, but your own, that is given to guide you.

Watts on the Mind.

7. Sedateness; calmness; tranquillity.

To whom the virgin majesty of Eve,
As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
With sweet austere composure thus replied. Milton.

The calmest and serenest hours of life, when the passions of nature are all silent, and the mind enjoys its most perfect composure. Watts.

8. Agreement; composition; settlement of differences.

The treaty at Uxbridge gave the fairest hopes of an happy composure. King Charles.

Van guard! to right and left the front unfold;
That all may see, who hate us, how we seek Peace and composure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Things were not brought to an extremity;
there seems yet to be room left for a composure;
hereafter there may be only for pity. Dryden.

COMPO'TATION. n. s. [compositio, Lat.]

The act of drinking or tipping together.

Secrecy to words spoke under the rose, only mean; in computation, from the ancient custom in symposiack meetings, to wear chaplets of roses. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If thou wilt prolong
Dire computation, forthwith reason quits
Her empire to confusion and misrule,
And vain debates: then twenty tongues at once
Conspire in senseless jargon; nought is heard
But din, and various clamour, and mad rant.

Philips.

To COMPO'UND. v. a. [compono, Lat.]

1. To mingle many ingredients together in one mass.

2. To form by uniting various parts.

Whoever compoundeth any like it, shall be cut off. Exodus.

It will be difficult to evince, that nature does not make decomposed bodies; I mean, mingle together such bodies as are already compound'd of elementary, or rather of simple ones. Boyle.

The ideas, being each but one single perception, are easier got than the more complex ones;
and therefore are not liable to the uncertainty which attends those compound'd ones. Locke.

3. To mingle in different positions; to combine.

We cannot have a single image that did not enter through the sight; but we have the power of altering and compounding those images into all the varieties of picture. Addison's Spectator.

4. [In grammar.] To form one word from two or more words.

Where it and Tigris embrace each other under the city of Apamia, there do they agree of a joint and compounded name, and are called Euphrates. Raleigh's History of the World.

5. To compose by being united.

Who'd be so mock'd with glory, as to live
But in a dream of friendship?
To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
But only painted like his varnish'd friends!

Shakespeare's Timon.

6. To adjust a difference by some recession from the rigour of claims.

I would to God all strifes were well compounded!

Shakespeare.

If there be any discord or suits between any of the family, they are compounded and appeased.

CONCE'ALMENT. n. s. [from conceal.]

1. The act of hiding; secrecy.
She never told her love;

But let concealment, like a worm, i' th' bud,
Feed on her damask cheek. Shakspeare.

He is a worthy gentleman,
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Few own such sentiments; yet this concealment derives rather from the fear of man than of any Being above. Glaville.

2. The state of being hid; privacy; delitescence.

A person of great abilities is zealous for the good of mankind, and as solicitous for the concealment as the performance of illustrious actions. Addison's Fables.

3. Hiding-place; retreat; cover shelter.

The choice of this holy name, as the most effectual concealment of a wicked design, supposes mankind satisfied that nothing but what is just is directed by the principles of it. Regin.

'Tis the cleft tree
Offers its kind concealment to a few;
Their fogs it inserts, and its moss their rest. Thomson.

To CONCEDE. v. a. [concedo, Latin.]

To yield; to admit; to grant; to let pass undisputed.

By expurgatory animadversions we might strike out great numbers of hidden quantities; and, having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown.

This must not be conceded without limitation. Boyle.

The atheist, if you concede to him that fortune may be an agent, doth presume himself safe and invulnerable. Bentley.

CONCEIT. n. s. [concept, French; conceptus, Latin.]

1. Conception; thought; idea; image in the mind.

Here the very shepherds have their fancies lifted to so high conceits, as the learned of other nations are content both to borrow their names, and imitate their cunning. Saunders.

Impossible it was, that ever their will should change or incline to remit any part of their duty, without some object having force to avert their conceit from God. Hobbes.

His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning:

There 's some conceit, or other, likes him well,
When that he bids good-morrow with such spirit. Shakspeare.

In laughing there ever precedeth a conceit of somewhat ridiculous, and therefore it is proper to man. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Understanding; readiness of apprehension.

How often, alas! did her eyes say unto me, that they loved! and yet I, not looking for such a matter, had not my conceit open to understand them. Saunders.

The first kind of things appointed by his humane, containeth whatsoever is good or evil: is notwithstanding more secret than that it can be discerned by every man's present conceit, without some deeper discourse and judgment. Hutchinson.

I shall be found of a quick conceit in judgment, and shall be admired. Waller.

3. Opinion, generally in a sense of contempt; fancy; imagination; fantastical notion.

I know not how conceits may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself Yields to the theft. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Strong conceit, like a new principle, carries all easily with it, when yet above common sense. Locke.

Malbranche has an odd conceit,
As ever enter'd Frenchman's pate.

Prior.

4. Opinion, in a neutral sense.

Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov.
I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. Pleasant fancy; gayety of imagination; acuteness.

His wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard:
there is no more conceit in him than is in a male
let. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

While he was on his way to the gibbet, a freak took him in the head to go off with a conceit.
L'Estrange.

6. Sentiment; striking thought.

Some to conceit alone their works confine,
And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at every line.
Pope.

7. Fondness; favourable opinion; opinionative pride.

Since by a little studying in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion; may he find it again by harder study, under humbler truth. Bentley.

8. Out of CONCEIT with. No longer fond of.

Not that I dare assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Preface.

What hath chiefly put me out of conceit with this moving manner, is the frequent disappointment. Swift.

To CONCEIT. v. a. [from the noun]

To conceive; to imagine; to think;
to believe.

One of two bad ways you must conceit me;
Either a coward, or a flatterer. Shakespeare.

They looked for great matters at their hands, in a cause which they conceited to be for the liberty of the subject. Bacon.

He conceits himself to be struck at, when he is not so much as thought of. L'Estrange.

The strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as unactive, and consequently as useless, as if they really were so. South.

CONCEITED. particip. adj. [from conceit.]

1. Endowed with fancy.

He was of countenance amiable, of feature comely, active of body, pleasantly conceited, and sharp of wit. Kneller.

2. Proud; fond of himself; opinionative; affected; fantastical.

There is another extreme in obscure writers, which some empty conceited heads are apt to run into, out of a prodigality of words, and a want of sense. Pelton on the Classics.

If you think me too conceited,
Or to passion quickly heated. Swift.

What you write of me, would make me more conceited than what I scribble myself. Pope.

3. With of before the object of conceit.

Every man is building a several way, impotently conceited of his own model and his own materials. Dryden.

If we consider how vicious and corrupt the Athenians were, how conceited of their own wit, science, and politeness. Bentley.

CONCEITEDLY. adv. [from conceited.]

Fancifully; whimsically.

Conceitedly dress her, and be assign'd

By you fit place for every flower and jewel:

Make her for love fit fuel. Donne.

CONCEITEDNESS. n. s. [from conceited.]

Pride; opinionativeness; fondness of himself.

When men think none worthy esteem, but such as claim under their own pretences, partiality and conceitedness make them give the pre-eminence. Collier on Pride.

CONCEITLESS. adj. [from conceit.] Stupid; without thought; dull of apprehension.

Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceited,
To be seduced by thy flattery? Shakespeare.

CONCEIVABLE. adj. [from conceive.]

1. That may be imagined or thought.

If it were possible to contrive an invention, whereby any conceivable weight may be moved by any conceivable power, with the same quickness, without other instrument, the works of nature would be too much subjected to art. Wilkins.

2. That may be understood or believed.

The freezing of the words in the air, in the northern climes, is as conceivable as this strange union. Glanville's Scopsis.

It is not conceivable, that it should be indeed that very person, whose shape and voice it assumed. Atterbury's Sermons.

CONCEIVABLENESS. n. s. [from conceivable.] The quality of being conceivable.

Dict.

CONCEIVABLY. adv. [from conceivable.] In a conceivable or intelligible manner.

If you compare my gentlemen with sir John,
you will hardly conceive him to have been bred in the same climate. Swift.

To CONCEIVE. v. n.

1. To think; to have an idea of.

The griev'd commons
Hardly conceive of me a let it be nois'd,
That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

O what avails me now that honour high,
To have conceiv'd of God; or that salute,
Hall, highly favour'd, among women blest! Milt.

Conceive of things clearly, and distinctly, in their own natures; conceive of things completely in all their parts; conceive of things comprehensively in all their properties and relations; conceive of things extensively in all their kinds; conceive of things orderly; or in a proper method. Watts' Logic.

Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
Concord and law of nature from the earth. Milt.

Unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion; such as, to set forth
Great things by small, if nature's concord broke,
Among the constellations war were sprung. Milt.
Kind concord, heavenly born! whose blissful reign

Holds this vast globe in one surrounding chain;
Soul of the world! Tickel.

A compact.

It appeareth by the concord made between Henry and Roderick the Irish king. Davies.

Harmony; concert of sounds.

The man who hath not musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons. Shakespeare.

word to another, distinct from regimen.

Have those who have writ about declensions;
concord, and syntaxes, lost their labour? Locke.

CONCORDANCE. n. s. [concordantia, Lat.]

Agreement.

A book which shows in how many texts of scripture any word occurs.

I shall take it for an opportunity to tell you how you are to rule the city, out of a concordance.

South's Sermons, Dedication.

Some of you turn over a concordance, and there, having the principal word, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn. Swift.

An old concordance bound long since. Swift.

A concord in grammar; one of the three chief relations in speech. It is not now in use in this sense.

After the three concordances learned, let the master read unto him the epistles of Cicero.

Ascham.

CONCORDANT. adj. [concordans, Lat.]

Agreeable; agreeing; correspondent; harmonious.

Were every one employed in points concordant to their natures, professions, and arts, commonwealths would rise up of themselves. Brotun.

CONCORDATE. n. s. [concordat, Fr. con- cordatum, Latin.] A compact; a convention.

How comes he to number the want of synods in the Gallican church among the grievances of that concordate, and as a mark of their slavery, since he reckons all convocations of the clergy
in England to be useless and dangerous? Swift.

CONCORPORAL. adj. [from concorpora, Lat. to incorporate.] Of the same body. Dict.

CONCORPORATE. v. a. [from con and corpus.] To unite in one mass or substance.

When we incorporate the sign with the signification, we conjoin the word with the spirit.

Taylor.

CONCORPORATE. v. n. [con and cor- pus.] To unite into one body.

Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine;
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so incorporate. Cleaveland.

CONCORPORATION. n. s. [from concor- porate.] Union in one mass; intimate mixture. Dict.

CONCOURSE. n. s. [concursum, Lat.]

1. The confluence of many persons or things to one place.

Do all the nightly guards,
The city's watches, with the people's fears,
The concourse of all good men, strike thee nothing? Ben Jonson.

The coalition of the good frame of the universe was not the product of chance, or fortuitous concourse of particles of matter. Hale.

Vain is his force, and vainer is his skill,
With such a concourse comes the flood of ill.

Dryden's Fables.

2. The persons assembled.

The prince with wonder hears, from every part,
The noise and busy concourse of the mart. Dryd.

3. The point of junction or intersection of two bodies.

So soon as the upper glass is laid upon the lower, so as to touch it at one end, and to touch the drop at the other end, making with the lower glass an angle of about ten or fifteen minutes; the drop will begin to move towards the concourse of the glasses, and will continue to move with an accelerated motion till it arrives at that concourse of the glasses. Newton.

CONCREMATION. n. s. [from concreme, Lat. to burn together.] The act of burning many things together. Dict.

CONCREMENT. n. s. [from concress, Lat.]

The mass formed by concretion; a collection of matter growing together.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCRESCENCE. n. s. [from concreresco, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concrecence hath not been taught. Raleigh.

TO CONCRETE. v. a. [concreto, Lat.]

To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The mineral or metallick matter, thus con- creting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it. Woodward.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun. Arbuthnot.

TO CONCRETE. v. a. To form by con-cretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferior world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute: we see it in the meteors. Hale.

CONCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface, of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Burnet.

2. [In logick.] Not abstract: applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is,
whereby those concrete names, God and man,
when we speak of Christ, do take intercommu-tably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it skilleth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save the world. Hooker.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express, or imply, or refer to, some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wise, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; as for a knave, a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly, and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them. Watts' Logick.

CONCRETE. n. s. [from concrete.] A mass formed by concretion, or union of various parts adhering to each other.

If gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCRETELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin, considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependance of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty. Norris.

CONCRE'TENESS. n. s. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass. Dict.

Acts which shall be done by the greater part of my executors, shall be as valid and effect as if all my executors had concurred in the same. Swift's Last Will.

3. It has quith before the person with whom one agrees.

It is not evil simply to concurr with the less, either in opinion or action; and that conformity with them is only then a disgrace, when we follow them in that they do amiss, or contrary in that they do without reason. Hume.

4. It has to before the effect to which one contributes.

Their affections were known to concurr in the most desperate counsels. Chapman.

Extremes in nature equal good produce. Extremes in man concurr to general use. Pope.

5. To be united with; to be conjoined.

To have an orthodox belief, and a true profession, concurring with a bad life, is only to deny Christ with a greater solemnity. Steele.

Testimony is the argument; and, if fair probabilities of reason concurr with it, this argument hath all the strength it can have. Tillotson.

6. To contribute to one common end, with joint power.

When outward causes concurr, the idle are soonest seized by this infection. Coleridge.

CONCURRENCE. n. s. [from concurrere.]

thereof, promised not to do any thing which beseemed not valiant men. Knolles' Hist.

3. Proof; convincing testimony.

Wanting frequent confirmation in a matter so confirmable, their affirmation carrieth but slow persuasion. Brown.

The arguments brought by Christ for the confirmation of his doctrine, were in themselves sufficient. South.

4. An ecclesiastical rite.

What is prepared for in catechising, is, in the next place, performed by confirmation; a most profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the practice of the apostles, which consists in two parts: the child's undertaking, in his own name, every part of the baptismal vow (having first approved himself to understand it): and to that purpose, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now (as in baptism) as his procurator to undertake for him, but as a witness to testify his entering this obligation. Hammond.

CONFIRMATOR. n. s. [from confirmo,
Latin.] An attester; he that puts a

CONFUS'DNESS. n. s. [from confused.]

Want of distinctness; want of clearness

Hitherunto these titles of honour carry a kind of confusedness, and rather betokened a successive office than an established dignity. Carew.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to natural inability, is want of attention.

Norris.

CONFUSION. n. s. [from confuse.]

1. Irregular mixture; tumultuous medley.

God, only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,

By tongues confusion was to ruin brought. Davies.

2. Tumult; disorder.

God is not a God of sedition and confusion, but of order and of peace. Hooker, Preface.

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets
Crying confusion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Indistinct combination.

The confusion of two different ideas, which a customary connexion of them in their minds hath made to them almost one, fills their heads with false views, and their reasonings with false consequences. Locke.

4. Overthrow; destruction.

The strength of their illusion
Shall draw him in to his confusion. Shakespeare.

5. Astonishment; distraction of mind; hurry of ideas.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
And fear in ev'ry heart,
When waves on waves, and gulphs in gulphs,
O'ercame the pilot's art. Spectator.

CONFUTABLE. adj. [from confute.] Possible to be disproved; possible to be shewn false.

At the last day, that inquisitor shall not present to God a bundle of calumnies, or confutable accusations; but will offer unto his omniscience a true list of our transgressions. Brown.

CONFUTATION. n. s. [confutatio, Lat.]

The act of confuting; disproof.

A confutation of atheism from the frame of the world. Bentley.

TO CONFUTE. v. a. [confuto, Latin.]

With right hands plighted, pledges of good-will.

Fairy Queen.

TO CONGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have conged with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest. Shakespeare.

CONGE D'ELIRE is French; and signifies in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to chuse a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishopricks, bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had, in ancient times, the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they chuse, demand of the king a congé d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Corwell.

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a congé d'elire to her friends. Spectator.

CONGE. n. s. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Chambers.

TO CONGEAL. v. a. [congelare, Latin.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,
Than ice, which is congeal'd with senseless cold,
Should kindle fire by wonderful device? Spenser.

In whose capacious womb

A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congeal'd.

Thomson's Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold

Oh, gentlemen, see! see! dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood.

Shakespeare.

TO CONGEAL. v. n. To concreate; to gather into a mass by cold.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, into which put quicksilver wrapt in linen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Burns's Theory.

CONGEALMENT. n. s. [from congeal.]

The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

CONGEABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard, soft, congeable, not congeable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congeable again by cold into brittle gleebs or crystals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONGELATION. n. s. [from congeal.]

1. Act of turning fluids to solids by cold.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression, or congelation of the fluid.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

There are congelations of the redundant water, precipitations, and many other operations.

Arbutnot on Air.

2. State of being congealed, or made solid, by cold.

Many waters and springs will never freeze; and many parts in rivers and lakes, where there are mineral eruptions, will still persist without congelation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONGENER. n. s. [Latin.] A thing of the same kind or nature.

The cherry-tree has been often grafted on the laurel, to which it is a congener. Miller.

CONGENEROUS. adj. [congener, Latin.] Of the same kind; arising from the same original.

When a people have no touch of conscience, no sense of their evil doings, it is bootless to think to restrain them.

Who against faith and conscience can be heard

Infallible?

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Conscience has not been wanting to itself in endeavouring to get the clearest information about the will of God.

But why must those be thought to 'scape, that feel

Those rods of scorpions, and those whips of steel,

Which conscience shakes?

Greeth's Jewry.

No courts created yet, nor cause was heard;

But all was safe, for conscience was their guard.

Dryden's Ovid.

Conscience signifies that knowledge which a man hath of his own thoughts and actions; and because, if a man judges fairly of his actions by comparing them with the law of God, his mind will approve or condemn him, this knowledge or conscience may be both an accuser and a judge.

Swift.

2. Justice; the estimate of conscience; the determination of conscience; honesty. This is sometimes a serious, and sometimes a ludicrous sense.

This is thank-worthy; if a man, for conscience toward God, endure grief.

persons to commit some crime; a plot;
a concerted treason.

O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,

When evils are most free? Shakspeare.

I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,

Against my life. Shakspeare's Tempest.

When scarce he had escap'd the blow

Of faction and conspiracy,

Death did his promis'd hopes destroy. Dryden.

2. In law, an agreement of men to do any thing; always taken in the evil part. It is taken for a confederacy of two, at the least, falsely to indict one, or to procure one to be indicted, of felony. Cowell.

3. A concurrence; a general tendency of many causes to one event.

When the time now came that misery was ripe for him, there was a conspiracy in all heavenly and earthly things, to frame fit occasions to lead him unto it. Sidney.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbid conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard.

Hurvey on Consumptions.

CONSPIRANT. adj. [conspirans, Latin.]

or plot; plotting.

Thou art a traitor,

Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

CONSPIR'ATION. n. s. [conspiratio, Lat.]

An agreement of many to one end.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should infer the same conclusion, were it not that the conspiration of interest were too potent for the diversity of judgment.

Decay of Piety.

CONSPIRATOR. n. s. [from conspiro, Lat.]

A man engaged in a plot; one who has secretly concerted with others the commission of a crime; a plotter.

Achitophel is among the conspirators with Absalom.

Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;

Thou that contriv'st to murder our dread lord.

Shakspeare.

But let the bold conspirator beware;

For heav'n makes princes its peculiar care. Dryd.

One put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy against him, together with all the names of the conspirators.

South.

- CONSPURCATION. n. s. [from conspurco, Latin.] The act of defiling ; defilement ; pollution.

- CONSTABLE. n. s. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises ; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables ; because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places ; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon : but these are properly castellani, or governors of castles. Cowell. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham ; now poor Edward Bohun. Shakespeare.

The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks,
i' th' common stocks, for a witch, Shakespeare.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did. Clarendon.

2. To overrun the CONSTABLE. [perhaps from conte stable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth : a low phrase.

- CO'NSTABLESHIP. n. s. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

This keepership is annexed to the constableness of the castle, and that granted out in lease. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

- CO'NSTANCY. n. s. [constantia, Latin.]

1. Immutability ; perpetuity ; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Consistency ; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution ; firmness ; steadiness ; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat ;
In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection ; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty ; veracity ; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shaks.

- CONSTANT. adj. [constans, Latin.]

1. Firm ; fixed ; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them,
you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle's History of Fire.

2. Unvaried ; unchanged ; immutable ; durable.

The world's a scene of changes ; and to be Constant, in nature were inconsistency. Cowley.

3. Firm ; resolute ; determined ; immovable ; unshaken.

Some shrewd contents
Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead ; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakespeare's Mer. of Fa.

4. Free from change of affection.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney.

5. Certain ; not various ; steady ; firmly adherent : with to.

Now through the land his care of souls he
stretch'd,

And like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call ;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by
all. Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion, as modelled by our national constitution ; and was constant to its offices in devotion both in publick and in his family. Addison's Freeholder.

- CO'NSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.]

Unvariably ; perpetually ; certainly ; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal ; nay, that they should not constantly do it.

Tillotson.

To CONSTELLATE. v. n. [constellatus, Latin.] To join lustre ; to shine with one general light.

The several things which engage our affections, do, in a transcendent manner, shine forth and constellate in God.

Boyle.

To CONSTELLATE. v. a. To unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

Great constitutions, and such as are constellated into knowledge, do nothing till they outdo all.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These scattered perfections, which were divided among the several ranks of inferior natures, were summed up and constellated in ours.

Glanville.

CONSTELLATION. n. s. [from constellate.]

1. A cluster of fixed stars.

For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light.

Isaiah.

The earth, the air, resounded ;

The heav'ns, and all the constellations rung.

Milton's Par. Lost.

A constellation is but one ;

Though 't is a train of stars.

Dryden.

2. An assemblage of splendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a constellation or conjuncture of all those gospel graces, faith, hope, charity, self-denial, repentance, and the rest.

Hammond.

CONSTERNATION. n. s. [from consterno, Lat.] Astonishment ; amazement ; alienation of mind by a surprise ; surprise ; wonder.

They find the same holy consternation upon themselves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven.

South,

The natives, dubious whom

They must obey, in consternation wait

Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.

Philips.

To CONSTIPATE. v. a. [from constipo, Latin.]

2. State of being ; particular texture of parts ; natural qualities.

This is more beneficial than any other constitution.

Bentley.

This light being trajected through the parallel prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other ; and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same condition as at first.

Newton's Opticks.

3. Corporeal frame.

Amongst many bad effects of this oily constitution, there is one advantage ; such who arrive to age are not subject to stricture of fibres.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. Temper of body, with respect to health or disease.

If such men happen, by their native constitution, to fall into the gout, either they mind it not at all, having no leisure to be sick, or they use it like a dog.

Temple.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution.

Dryden.

5. Temper of mind.

Demetas, according to the constitution of a dull head, thinks no better way to shew himself wise than by suspecting everything in his way. Slavery.
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world

Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakespeare.

He defended himself with undaunted courage, and less passion than was expected from his constitution. Clarendon.

2. A number of persons consulted together; a council.

A consultation was called, wherein he advised a salivation. Wiceman of Abiscus.

3. In law.

Consultatio is a writ, whereby a cause, being formerly removed by prohibition from the ecclesiastical court, or court christian, to the king's court, is returned thither again: for the judges of the king's court, if, upon comparing the libel with the suggestion of the party, they do find the suggestion false, or not proved, and therefore the cause to be wrongfully called from the court christian; then, upon this consultation or deliberation, decree it to be returned again. Cowell.

CONSULTER. n. s. [from consult.] One that consults, or asks counsel or intelligence.

There shall not be found among you a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard.

Deuteronomy.

CONSUMABLE. adj. [from consume.] Susceptible of destruction; possible to be wasted, spent, or destroyed.

Asbestos does truly agree in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire; but it doth contract so much fuliginous matter from the earthy parts of the oil, though it was tried with some of the purest oil, that in a very few days it did choke and extinguish the flame. Witkins.

Our growing rich or poor depends only on, which is greater or less, our importation or exportation of consumable commodities. Locks.

TO CONSUME. v. a. [consumo, Latin.]

To waste; to spend; to destroy.

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury.

Shakspeare.

Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather but little in; for the locusts shall consume it. Deuteronomy.

Thus in soft anguish she consumes the day,
Nor quits her deep retirement. Thomson.

TO CONSUME. v. n. To waste away; to be exhausted.

These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die; like fire and powder,
Which, as they meet, consume. Shaksp.

CONSUMER. n. s. [from consume.] One that spends, wastes, or destroys any thing.

Money may be considered as in the hands of the consumer, or of the merchant who buys the commodity, when made to export. Locks.

TO CONSUMMATE. v. a. [consummare, Fr. consummare, Lat.] To complete; to perfect; to finish; to end. Anciently accented on the first syllable.

Yoursself, myself, and other lords, will pass
To consummate this business happily. Shaksp.

CONTABULATION. n. s. [contabulatio, Lat.] A joining of boards together; a boarding a floor.

CONTACT. n. s. [contactus, Latin.] Touch; close union; juncture of one body to another.

The Platonists hold, that the spirit of the lover doth pass into the spirits of the person loved, which causeth the desire of return into the body; whereupon followeth that appetite of contact and conjunction. Bacon's Natural History.

When the light fell so obliquely on the air, which in other places was between them, as to be all reflected, it seemed in that place of contact to be wholly transmitted. Newton's Opticks.

The air, by its immediate contact, may coagulate the blood which flows along the air-bladders. Arbutnot on Diet.

CONTACTION. n. s. [contactus, Latin.] The act of touching; a joining one body to another.

That deleterious it may be at some distance, and destructive without corporal contaction, there is no high improbability. Brown.

CONTACTION. n. s. [contagio, Lat.]

1. The emission from body to body by which diseases are communicated.

If we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion. Shakespeare.

In infection and contagion from body to body, as the plague and the like, the infection is received many times by the body passive; but yet is, by the strength and good disposition thereof, repulsed. Bacon.

2. Infection; propagation of mischief, or disease.

Nor will the goodness of intention excuse the scandal and contagion of example. King Charles.

Down they fell,
And the dire hiss renew'd, and the dire form Catch'd by contagion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Pestilence; venomous emanations.

Will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night? Shaks.

CONTAGIOUS. adj. [from contagio, Lat.] Infectious; caught by approach; poisonous; pestilential.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
From their misty jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

We sicken soon from her contagious care,
Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.

CONTAGIOUSNESS. n. s. [from contagious.] The quality of being contagious.

TO CONTAIN. v. a. [contingo, Lat.]

1. To hold as a vessel,

There are many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. John.

Gently instructed I shall hence depart,
Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
Of knowledge, what this vessel can contain. Milton.

What thy stores contain bring forth, and pour Abundance. Milton.

2. To comprehend; to comprise.

What seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd. Milton.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.
Milton.

3. To comprise, as a writing.
Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture.
1 Petr.

4. To restrain; to withhold; to keep within bounds.

All men should be contained in duty ever after, without the terror of warlike forces.

Spenser on Ireland.
Their king's person contains the unruly people from evil occasions.
Spenser.

I tell you, sirs,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.—
—Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves.
Shakespeare.

To CONTAIN. v. n. To live in continence.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase, till I could no longer contain. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CONTAINABLE. adj. [from contain.] Possible to be contained.

The air containable within the cavity of the solipile, amounted to eleven grains. Boyle.

To CONTAMINATE. v. a. [contamino, Latin.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? Shak.

A base pander holds the chamber door,
Whilst by a slave, no gentler than a dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakespeare.
Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed,
Even in the bed she hath contaminated. Shak.

I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shaks.

Though it be necessitated, by its relation to flesh, to a terrestrial converse; yet 't is, like the sun, without contaminating its beams. Glanv.

He that lies with another man's wife propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies.
Ayliffe's Paragon.

CONTAMINATION. n. s. [from contaminate.] Pollution; defilement.

CONTEMERATED. adj. [contemeratus, Latin.] Violated; polluted. Dict.

To CONTEMN. v. a. [contemno, Lat.] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,
Than still contemned and flattered. Shakespeare.
Eve, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
To argue in thee something more sublime
And excellent than what thy mind contemns.
Milton.

Pygmalion then the Tyrian sceptre sway'd,
One who contemn'd divine and human laws;
Then strife ensued. Dryden's Virg. Æneid.

CONTEMNER. n. s. [from contemn.] One that contemns; a despiser; a scorner.

He counsels him to prosecute innovators of worship, not only as contemnners of the gods, but disturbers of the state. South.

To CONTEMPER. v. a. [contempero, Latin.] To moderate; to reduce to a lower degree by mixing something of opposite qualities.

The leaves qualify and temper the heat, and hinder the evaporation of moisture. Ray.

CONTEMPERAMENT. n. s. [from contempero, Lat.] The degree of any quality as tempered to others.

There is nearly an equal contemperament of the warmth of our bodies to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere. Derben.

To CONTEMPERATE. v. a. [from contemper.] To diminish any quality by something contrary; to moderate; to temper.

The mighty Nile and Niger do not only moisten and contemperate the air, but refresh and humectate the earth. Brown.

If blood abound, let it out, regulating the patient's diet, and contempering the humours. Wise man's Surgery.

CONTEMPERATION. n. s. [from contemperate.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the contemperation of fervour in the heart. Brown.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the contemperations of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies. Hale.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know. Watts.

CONTEMPLETE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplete. Shakespeare.
Sapor had an heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contemplant over the same as if he had been Jupiter. Paschen.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplant on you? Dryden's Jovocul, Preface.

CONTEMPLATION. n. s. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now? what serious contemplation are you in? Shakespeare.

Contemplation is keeping the idea, which is brought into the mind, for some time actually in view. Lick.

2. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

I have breath'd a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here. Shakespeare.

3. The faculty of study; opposed to the power of action.

There are two functions, contemplation and practice: according to that general division of objects; some of which entertain our speculation, others employ our actions. South.

CONTEMPLATIVE. adj. [from contemplate.]

1. Given to thought or study; studious; thoughtful.

Fixt and contemplative their looks,
Still turning over nature's books. Dryden.

2. Employed in study; dedicated to study.

CON

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs: my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

Contemplative men may be without the pleasure of discovering the secrets of state, and men of action are commonly without the pleasure of tracing the secrets of divine art. Grew.

3. Having the power of thought or meditation.

So many kinds of creatures might be to exercise the contemplative faculty of man. Roy.

CONTE'MPLATIVELY. adv. [from contemplative.] Thoughtfully; attentively; with deep attention.

 one of them he doth content every faction, the musick of praise will be fuller. Bacon.

Wheat is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain. Carver.

CONTENT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Moderate happiness; such satisfaction as, though it does not fill up desire, appeases complaint.

Nought's had, all's spent,
 Where our desire is got without content. Shaksp.
 One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;
 This every little accident destroy'd. Dryden.
 A wise content his even soul secur'd;
 By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd.
Smith on Philippi.

2. Acquiescence; satisfaction in a thing unexamined.

Others for language all their care express,
 And value books, as women men, for dress:
 Their praise is still—the stile is excellent;
 The sense they humbly take upon content. Pope.

3. [from contentus, contained.] That which is contained, or included, in any thing.

Tho' my heart's content firm love doth bear,
 Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. Shakespeare.

CONTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from contentious.]
Perversely; quarrelsome.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, or only to justify our own, but to applaud and confirm his maturer assertions. Brown.

CONTENTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from contentious.]
Proneness to contest; perverseness; turbulence; quarrelsomeness.

Do not contentiousness, and cruelty, and study of revenge, seldom fall of retaliation? Bentley.

CONTENTLESS. adj. [from content.]
Discontented; dissatisfied; uneasy.

Best states, contentless,
Have a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst, content. Shakespeare.

CONTENTMENT. n. s. [from content, the verb.]

1. Acquiescence, without plenary satisfaction.

Such men's contentment must be wrought by stratagem: the usual method of fare is not for them. Hooker.

Submission is the only reasoning between a creature and its Maker, and contentment in his will is the best remedy we can apply to misfortunes. Temple.

Contentment without external honour, is humility; without the pleasure of eating, temperance. Grew's Cosmologia.

Some place the bliss in action, some in ease; Those call it pleasure, and contentment these. Pope.

But now no face divine contentment wears,
'T is all black sadness, or continual tears. Pope.

2. Gratification.

At Paris the prince spent one whole day, to give his mind some contentment in viewing of a famous city. Wotton.

CONTERMINOUS. adj. [conterminus, Lat.]

The fluid body of quicksilver is contexted with the salts it carries up in sublimation. Boyle.

CONTEXT. n. s. [contextus, Latin.] The general series of a discourse; the parts of the discourse that precede and follow the sentence quoted.

That chapter is really a representation of one, which hath only the knowledge, not practice, of his duty; as is manifest from the context. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CONTEXT. adj. [from context.] Knit together; firm.

Hollow and thin, for lightness; but withal context and firm, for strength. Derham.

CONTEXTURE. n. s. [from context.] The disposition of parts one among others; the composition of any thing out of separate parts; the system; the constitution; the manner in which any thing is woven or formed.

He was not of any delicate texture; his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wotton.

Every species, afterwards expressed, was produced from that idea, forming that wonderful texture of created beings. Dryden.

Hence can relax
 The ground's texture; hence Tartarian dregs,
 Sulphur and nitrous spume, enkindling fierce,
 Bellow'd within their darksome caves. Philips.

This apt, this wise texture of the sea,
 Makes it the ships, driv'n by the winds, obey;
 Whence hardy merchants sail from shore to shore. Blackmore.

CONTIGNATION. n. s. [contignatio, Lat.]

1. A frame of beams joined together; a story.

We mean a porch, or cloister, or the like, of one contignation, and not in storied buildings. Wotton's Architecture.

CONTINGENCY. } The quality of being fortuitous; accidental possibility.

Their credulities assent unto any prognosticks, which, considering the contingency in events, are only in the prescience of God. Brown.

For once, O heav'n! unfold thy adamant book;

If not thy firm immutable decree,

At least the second page of great contingency,

Such as consists with wills originally free. Dryd.

Aristotle says, we are not to build certain rules upon the contingency of human actions.

South.

CONTINGENT. adj. [contingens, Latin.]

Falling out by chance; accidental; not determinable by any certain rule.

Hazard naturally implies in it, first, something future; secondly, something contingent. South.

I first informed myself in all material circum-feast. Proverbs.

Other care perhaps

May have diverted from continual watch

Our great forbiddor. Milton.

'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears. Pope.

2. [In law.] A continual claim is made from time to time, within every year and day, to land or other thing, which,
in some respect, we cannot attain without danger. For example, if I be dis-seised of land, into which, though I have right into it, I dare not enter for fear of beating; it behooveth me to hold on my right of entry to the best opportunity of me and mine heir, by approaching as near it as I can, once every year as long as I live; and so I save the right of entry to my heir. Cowell.

3. It is sometimes used for perpetual.

CONTINUALLY. adv. [from continual.]

1. Without pause; without interruption.

The drawing of boughs into the inside of a room, where fire is continually kept, hath been tried with grapes. Bacon.

The brute immediately regards his own preservation, or the continuance of his species.

Addison's Spectator.

2. Permanence in one state.

Continuance of evil doth in itself increase evil.

Sidney.

A chamber where a great fire is kept, though the fire be at one stay, yet with the continuance continually hath its heat increased. Sidney.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, avowed continuance in sins. South.

3. Abode in a place.

4. Duration; lastingness.

You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Their duty depending upon fear, the one was of no greater continuance than the other. Hayes.

That pleasure is not of greater continuance, which arises from the prejudice or malice of its hearers. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Perseverance.

To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life. Romans.

6. Progression of time.

In thy book all my members were written,
which in continuance were fashioned. Psalms.

7. Resistance to separation of parts; continuity.

Wool, tow, cotton, and raw silk, have, besides the desire of continuance in regard to the tenuity of their thread, a greediness of moisture.

Bacon.

CONTINUATE. adj. [continuatus, Lat.]

3. To persevere.

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. John.

Down rush'd the rain

Impetuous, and continued till the earth

No more was seen. Milton.

TO CONTINUE. v. a.

1. To protract, or hold without interruption.

O, continue thy loving kindness unto them! Psalms.

You know how to make yourself happy, by only continuing such a life as you have been long accustomed to lead. Pope.

2. To unite without a chasm, or intervening substance.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments and sustenance. Brown.

The dark abyss, whose boiling gulph

Tamely endur'd a bridge of wondrous length, From hell continued, reaching th' utmost orb

Of this frail world. Milton's Par. Lost.

Here Priam's son, Deiphobus, he found, Whose face and limbs were one continued wound; Dishonest, with lopp'd arms, the youth appears, Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears. Dryden's Æneid.

Where any motion or succession is so slow, as that it keeps not pace with the ideas in our minds, there the series of a constant continued succession is lost, and we perceive it not but with certain gaps of rest between. Locke.

Without interruption; without ceasing.

By perseverance, I do not understand a continually uniform, equal course of obedience, and such as is not interrupted with the least act of sin. Norris.

CONTINUER. n. s. [from continue.]

That which has the power of perseverance.

I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer. Shakspeare.

CONTINUITY. n. s. [continuitas.]

1. Connexion uninterrupted; close union.

It is certain, that in all bodies there is a continuity of union, and evitaton of solution. Bacon's M.

Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment. Shakspeare.

CONTR'OVERSIAL. adj. [from controversy.] Relating to disputes; disputatious.

It happens in controversial discourses as it does in the assaulting of towns; where, if the ground be but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther enquiry whom it belongs to,
so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.

Locke.

CO'NTROVERSY. n. s. [controversia, Lat.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died
the very day they were first brought forth. Hooker.

Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness. 1 Timothy.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept,
Into the press from ruin'd cloisters leapt. Denn.

This left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked. Deuteronomy.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations.

Jeremiah.

4. Opposition; enmity. This is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

And stemming it with hearts of controversy. Shaks.

TO CONTR'VERT. v. a. [controverto, Lat.] To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them,
he may do it very safely for me. Cheyne.

Hooker seems to use the word contro-verse, if it be not an erratum.

Persuasion ought to be fully settled in men's hearts, that, in litigations and controverted causes of such quality, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Hooker.

CONTR'EVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert.] Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discoursing of matters dubious, and many controvertible truths, we cannot without artful-gancy intreat a credulity, or implere any further assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CONTR'EVERTIST. n. s. [from controvert.] Disputant; a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not temptuous.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produc'd they me
To be a publick spectacle. Shakspeare.

In all the quarrels and tumults at Rome, though the people frequently proceeded to rude contumelious language, yet no blood was ever drawn in any popular commotions, till the time of the Gracchi. Sayce.

2. Inclined to utter reproach or practice insults; brutal; rude.

There is yet another sort of contumelious persons: who indeed are not chargeable with the circumstance of ill employing their wit; for let use none of it. Government of the Tongue.

Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, madbrain'd war. Shaks.

3. Productive of reproach; shameful;
ignominious.

As it is in the highest degree injurious to them,
so is it contumelious to him. Darby of Prov.

CONTE'M'LI'OUSLY. adv. [from contumelious.] Reproachfully; contemptuously; rudely.

The people are not wont to take so great offence, when they are excluded from honour and offices, as when their persons are contu-meliously trodden upon. Hooker.

Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace. Shaks.

CONTUMELIOUSNESS. n. s. [from contumelious.] Rudeness; reproach.

CONTUMELY. n. s. [contumelia, Lat.] Rudeness; contemptuousness; bitterness of language; reproach.

If the helm of chief government be in the hands of a few of the wealthiest, then laws, providing for continuance thereof, must make the punishment of contumely and wrong, offered unto any of the common sort, sharp and grievous, that so the evil may be prevented. Hooker.

Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,

The pang of despis'd love, the law's delay. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

It was undervalued and depressed with some bitterness and contumely. Clarendon.

Why should any man be troubled at the contumelies of those, whose judgment deserves not to be valued? Tillotson.

Eternal contumely attend that guilty title, which claims exemption from thought, and arrogates to its wearers the prerogative of brutes. Addison.

TO CONTU'SE. v. a. [contusus, Latin.]

1. To beat together; to bruise.

Of their roots, barks, and seeds, contused together, and mingled with other earth, and well watered with warm water, there came forth herbs muchlike the other. Bacon.

2. To bruise the flesh without a breach of the continuity.

The ligature contuses the lips in cutting them, so that they require to be digested before they can unite. Wiseman.

CONTUSION. n. s. [from contusio.]

1. The act of beating or bruising.

2. The state of being beaten or bruised.

Take a piece of glass, and reduce it to powder; it acquiring by contusion a multitude of minute surfaces, from a diaphanous, degenerates into a white body. Boyle on Colours.

3. A bruise; a compression of the fibres, distinguished from a wound.

That winter lion, who in rage forgets Aged contusions, and all bruise of time. Shaks.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and all contusions, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon.

CONVALESCENCE. n. s. [from convalesco, Lat.]

CONVALESCENCY. s. lesco, Lat.] Renewal of health; recovery from a disease.

COOKERY. n. s. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit

Found th' art of cook'ry to delight his sense:

More bodies are consum'd and kill'd with it,

Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence. Dav.

Ev'ry one to cook'ry pretends. King's Cookery.

These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepared by cookery. Arbutnot.

COOL. adj. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. Somewhat told; approaching to cold. He set his leg in a pail-full, as hot as he could well endure it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.

2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion: as, a cool friend; a cool deceiver.

COOL. n. s. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see, where Lucia, at her wonted hour,

Amid the cool of yon high marble arch,

Enjoys the noon-day breeze! Addison.

Philander was enjoying the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison.

TO COOL. v. a. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.

Snow they use in Naples instead of ice; because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

Shakespeare's Henry iv.

He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison's Spectator.

Had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cooled their zeal. Swift.

TO COOL. v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool: I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness. Shakespeare.

You never cool while you read Homer. Dryd.

I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

COOLER. n. s. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts: first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity. Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man. Harvey.

Acid things were used only as coolers.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the sillage behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'OLLY. adv. [from cool.]

She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought, And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams, Sits coolly calm. Thomson's Summer.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Atterbury.

CO'OLNESS. n. s. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves and other spices, naphtha, and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed. Bacon's Natural History.

The toad loveth shade and coolness. Bacon.

Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up.

Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup;
There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost, Temper'd hot July with December's frost. Waller.
The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade.
Dryden's Virgil.

1. Want of affection; disinclination.
They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again.
Clarendon.

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.
2. A cage; a penn for animals, as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain the day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudary augurations.
Brown.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop.
L'Estrange.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders. Shak.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravenstein, that he stirr'd not; and likewise held in strait siege the town.
Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and coop'd up.
L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,

Coop'd up a second time within your town!
Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind;
Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd.
Dryden's Juvenal.

Coop'd in a narrow isle, observing dreams
With flattering wizards. Dryden.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,
Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryd.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world.
Locke.

They are coop'd in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant.
Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again?
Pope.

COOPER. n. s. [coupe, French.] A motion in dancing.

O'OPER. n. s. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

CO'OPERAGE. n. s. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

To COOPERATE. v. n. [con and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends.
Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity.
Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion.
Chrym.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this charge, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension.
Rogers.

COOPERATION. n. s. [from cooperate.]

The act of contributing, or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature.
Bacon's Natural History.

COOPERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.]

Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR. n. s. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTATION. n. s. [coopto, Lat.] Adoption; assumption.

COORDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Lat.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shellfish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse; with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables.
Watts.

COORDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.]

In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS. n. s. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION. n. s. [from coordinate.]

The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power; a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy.

Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lysidius has reason to say that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state.
Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

COOT. n. s. [maer-koet, Dut. cotée, Fr.]

A small black waterfowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

COP

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden.
COP. n. s. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cop-castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill; a cop of cherry-stones, for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

COPAL. n. s. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPARCENARY. n. s. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter. Hale.

COPARCENER. n. s. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor.

Corwell.
This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters; in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. s. An equal share of coparceners. Philips' World of Words.

COPARTNER. n. s. [con and partner.]

One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,
Th' associates and copartners of our loss. Milb.

Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake Full happiness with me? Or rather not;
But keep the odds of knowledge in my power,
Without copartner? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Rather by them
I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell
Copartner in these regions of the world. Milb.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. s. [from copartner.]

The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale.

COPATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed. Hanmer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatain hat. Shak.

COPAYVA. n. s. [It is sometimes written capivi, copivi, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brasil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. s. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head: as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contain'd
Within this goodly cope, both most and least,
Their being have, and daily are increas'd. Spenser.

Over head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew,

COP

And flying vaulted either host with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together rush'd
Both battles main. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as its master. Dryden.

TO COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and coped over head. Addison on Italy.

2. To contend with; to oppose.

Know, my name is lost,
By treason's tooth-bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakspeare's King Lear.

3. To reward; to give in return.

I and my friend
Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakspeare.

TO COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed. [In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koop, to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else, with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal. Shak. Henry IV.

It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing like death, to chide away this shame
That *cop*es with death itself, to 'scape from it. Shakspeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd
And rash, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly understood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Estreux.

On every plain,
Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war. Pope.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addison's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects and things near a-kin to what is already known, and then advance to the more remote and harder parts of knowledge by slow degrees; it is able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing happy success. Watson on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or sentiments:

Thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must tread
The royal fool thou cop'st with. Shakspeare.
Thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. Shakspeare.

TO COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not a use.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and where He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakspeare.

COPESMATE. n. s. [perhaps for copartner.] a companion in drinking; or one who dwells under the same cope, for house; Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever staid in place, ne spake to wight,
Till that the fox his copesmate he had found.
Hubbard's Tale.

COPIER. n. s. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.
A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.
2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier,
and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden.
Let the faint copier, on old Tiber's shore,
Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace.

Tickel.

COPING. n. s. [from cope.] The upper tire of masonry which covers the wall.
All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble shew by their graceful projections.

Addison's Freeholder.

COPIOUS. adj. [copia, Lat.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.
Full measure only bounds

Excess, before the all-bounteous king, who show'r'd

With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milt.
This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious
use of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbutnot.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treasures forth
In various converse. Thomson's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song
Henceforth; and never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin.

Milton.

COPIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; diffusely.

These several remains have been so copiously described by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new discoveries on so beaten a subject. Addison.

COPIOUSNESS. n. s. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

2. Diffusion; exuberance of style.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes. Dryden.

COPIST. n. s. [from copy.] A copier;
a transcriber; an imitator.

COPLAND. n. s. A piece of ground which terminates with an acute angle.

Dict.

COPPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copped like a sugar-loaf. Wiseman's Surgery.

A galeated eschias being copped and somewhat conic. Woodward.

COPPEL. n. s. [This word is variously spelt: as copel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel;
VOL. I.

but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry, in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined.
Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while.
The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dross, which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test. Harris.

COPPER. n. s. [koper, Dutch; cuprum,
Latin.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. Hill on Fossils.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.
Euxa.

COPPER. n. s. A vessel made of copper:
commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels. Bacon.

COPPER-NOSE. n. s. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose. Shak.

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, look red, and rise in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and make copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wicman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. s. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impression, distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. s. [copper and work.]
A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This is like those wrought at copper-works.

Woodward.

COPPERAS. n. s. [kopperoase, Dut. cou-perouse, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. This factitious copperas, in many respects, agrees with the native green vitriol.

Chambers. Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion.

Brown.

CO'PPERSMITH. n. s. [copper and smith.]

One that manufactures copper.

Salmones, as the Grecian tale is,

Was a mad coppersmith of Elis;

Up at his forge by morning peep.

Swift.

CO'PPERWORM. n. s. [teredo, Lat.]

1. A little worm in ships.

2. A worm that fretteth garments.

3. A worm breeding in one's hand.

Ainsworth.

CO'PPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines.

Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. s. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] A low wood cut at stated times for fuel; a place overrun with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and coppies of far more humble growth.

Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,

A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot.

Shakspeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood.

Bacon.

The willows, and the hazel coppies green,

Shall now no more be seen

Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays.

Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines.

Locke.

CO'PPLE-DUST. n. s. [probably for coppel or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or copple-dust, by pouncing into the quicksilver.

Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water.

Woodward.

CO'PPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppl'd.

Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. s. [abbreviated from coppice.]

A low wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The east quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd, Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd.

Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay, His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden.
To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copping wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence.

Swift.

CO'PULA. n. s. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition: as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying.

Watts's Logic.

To CO'PULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater.

Bacon.

To CO'PULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children.

Wicma.

COPULA'TION. n. s. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unheson.

Hooker.

CO'PULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Caesar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality.

Watts.

COPY. n. s. [copie, Fr. copis, low Latin; quod cuiquam facta est copia exscribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κῶπῃ, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might

From your fair mind new copies write.

Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original.

Denham.

He stept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small.

South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form.

Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies.

Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;

In bed he slept not, for my urging it;

At board he fed not, for my urging it.

Shakspeare.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet.

Hilder.

The first of them I have forgotten; and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press.

Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;

But in them nature's copy's not eternal.

Shakspeare.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. s. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. s. [copy and bold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence.

Copy-bold is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vestium, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-bold; and they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-bold lands.

COPY-HOLDER. n. s. [from copy-bold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

To CO'PY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers' fame.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,

Her virtues fewer swains admir'd.

To CO'PY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better.

Dryd.

3. Sometimes after.
Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love.

Addison's Spectator.

To COQUE'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamblers play, and I railing at you both.

Swift.

To COQUE'T. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge beau,

I saw coquetting t'other night,
In publick, with that odious knight.

Swift.

COQUE'TRY. n. s. [coquerie, Fr.] Affection of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments.

Addison.

COQUETTE. n. s. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are spark-led.

Arbuthnot.

CO'RACLE. n. s. [cowraugle, Welsh; probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CO'RAL. n. s. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom.

Hill's Mat. Med.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant; it hath no leaves; it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see.

Racon.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods, And sees the secret source of subterranean floods. Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was inclos'd Within the wall, of alabaster white, And crimson coral, for the queen of night, Who takes in sylvan sports her chaste delight. Dryden.

Or where's the sense direct or moral, That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.
2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. s. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

CORALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again as it becomes calm. Woodward.

CORALLINE. n. s. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a sea plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owse. Mortimer.

CORALLOID. } adj. [καρραλλοειδής.] Re-CORALLOIDAL. } sembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may endure under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it. Woodward on Fossils.

CORANT. n. s. [courant, Fr.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walsb.

CORBAN. n. s. [קרבן] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant, as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings which were made in money were deposited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, Fr.] Crooked.

For siker thy head very tottie is,
So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss. Spencer.

CO'RBEILS. n. s. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

CO'RBEL. n. s. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CO'RBEL. } n. s.

CO'RBIIL. }

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semigirders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CORD. n. s. [cori, Welsh; cborda, Lat. corde, Fr.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Jerush.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,

These num'rous cords are thro' the body spread. Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. s. [cord and make.]

One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. s. [cord and wood.]

Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

CO'RDAGE. n. s. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables, should be made,

Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade. Dryden.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Raleigh.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CO'RDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder, To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window. Shakespeare.

CORDELI'ER. n. s. A Franciscan friar; so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier! Prior.

CO'RDIAL. n. s. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have shortly ease;
But such sweet cordials pass physicians art.

Spenser.

Cordials of pity give me now,

For I too weak for purges grow.

Cowley.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind.

Dryden.

CO'RDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wiseman.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial super-structing of christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hummond.

He, with looks of cordial love,

Hung over her enamour'd.

Milton.

CORDIA'LITY. n. s. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or referenc' unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brewin.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

CO'RDIALITY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.
Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with and receive it.

South's Sermons.

CO'RDINER. n. s. [cordannier, Fr.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statures.

CO'RDON. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet.

Chambers.

CORDWAIN. n. s. Cordovan leather, from Cordova in Spain. Spanish leather.
Her straight legs most bravely were embey'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CORDWA'INER. n. s. [uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevoux.] A shoemaker.

CORE. n. s. [caur, Fr.; cor, Lat.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square he raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.

Dig out the cores below the surface. Mortimer.

They wasteful eat,

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.

Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a bile or sore.

Launce the sore

And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself;
for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. s. [coriandrum, Latin.]

A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2.
Smaller reticulated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found. Miller.
Israel called the name thereof manna: and it was, like coriander seed, white. Benedus.

CORINTH. n. s. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the rasp, supply Delicious draughts. Philips.

The chief riches of Zant consisteth in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.

Broomes.

CORINTHIAN Order.

This is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate, of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of scanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Gallimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Vil-lalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers.

Dryden.

CORK. n. s. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticem astrictum pice dimovebit ;

Ampbora fumum bibere instituta

Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft.

Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England.

Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pry'thee take the cork out of thy mouth, that

I may drink thy tidings. Shakspeare.

Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good ;

Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.

King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay.

Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. s. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night.

Swift.

CO'RKY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork ; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corky arms.

Shakspeare.

CO'RMORANT. n. s. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,

Live register'd upon our brazen tombs ;

When, spite of cormorant devouring time,

Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge.

Shakspeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, putock, and cormorant.

Peachum.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life

Sat like a cormorant.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant.

Dryden.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. s. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonick dialects ; as, in an old Runick rhyme, Hagul er kaldastur corna.

Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods ; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone.

John.

The people cry you mock'd them ; and, of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

Shakspeare.

2. Grain yet unrecaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow

In our sustaining corn.

Shakspeare.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe.

Kneller.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthrashed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Job.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful ; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet

Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a boot with you.

Shakspeare.

The man that makes his toe

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake.

Shakspeare.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do engrieve either towards rain or towards frost.

Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail ; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis.

Wiseman.

He first that useful secret did explain,

That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain.

Gay's Part.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns.

Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns, An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorns.

Swift.

COR'NCUTTER. n. s. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it. Wise-man.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spectator.

COR'NEL.

CORNE'LIAN-TREE. } n. s. [from cornus, Lat.]

The cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree, as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheel-work. Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon.

A huntress issuing from the wood,
Reclining on her cornel spear she stood. Dryd.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows
The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows
The fruits of cornel, as they feast around. Pope.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryd.

CORNE'LIAN-STONE. See CARNELIAN.

COR'NEMUSE. n. s. [Fr.] A kind of rustic flute.

COR'NEOUS. adj. [from corneus, Lat.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Embattled in her field. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant,

'Midst summer's plenty, thinks of winter's want;
By constant journeys careful to prepare
Her stores, and bringing home the corny ear. Prior.

3. Containing corn.

They lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

CO'ROLLARY. n. s. [corollarium, Latin; from corolla; finit coronat opus: corol-lair, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corol-lary, that we enforce our vigilance against it.

Government of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself. Dryden's Publick Prajse.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,
Rather than want. Shakespeare's Tempest.

CORO'NA. n. s. [Lat.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip.

Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentells, make a noble shew by their graceful projections.

Spectator.

CO'RONAL. n. s. [corona, Lat.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine. Spenser.

CO'RONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

CO'RONARY. adj. [coronarius, Lat.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differed from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks or coronary spots upon the crown. Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Beatty.

CORONA'TION. n. s. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,
To shew my duty in your coronation. Shaksp.

A cough, sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day. Shaksp.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh——'s coronation through the town. Dryd.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancied scene.
See coronations rise on every green. Pope.

CO'RONER. n. s. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to inquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impannelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him give my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drowned. Shakespeare.

CO'RONET. n. s. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery

Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and islands were

As plates dropt from his pocket. Shakespeare.

All the rest are countesses.

—Their coronets say so. *Shakespeare.*Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt.Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,

And garters, stars, and coronets, appear. Pope.

a. An ornamental headdress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl. *Sidney.*Under a coronet his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd. *Milton.*CORPORAL. n. s. [corrupted from caporal, Fr.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.The cruel corp'ral whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tip'd, would set me clear.*Gay.*CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that bath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him. *Harris.*CORPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporeal toil,
A hundred alms-houses right well supplied.*Shakespeare.*Render to me some corporeal sign about her,
More evident than this. *Shakespeare.*That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporeal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. *Raleigh.*Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporeal pains; and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind.*Atterbury.*2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporeal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporeal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air; and what seem'd corporeal
Melted, as breath, into the wind. *Shakespeare.*And from these corporeal nutrimenta, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. *Milt.*CORPORALITY. n. s. [from corporeal.]
The quality of being imbodied.If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all others, the most subtle and pure. *Raleigh's History.*CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporeal.]

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall. *Shakespeare.*CORPORATENESS. n. s. [from corporate.]The state of a body corporate; a community. *Dict.*CORPORATION. n. s. [from corpus, Latin.]A body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter; even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. *Cowell.*Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men. *Hooker.*Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men she doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make. *Dante.*CORPORATURE. n. s. [from corpus, Latin.]The state of being imbodied. *Dict.*CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Latin.]1. Having a body; material; not spiritual.
See CORPORAL.The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal substances could add Speed almost spiritual. *Milton's Par. Lost.*Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal.*South's Sermons.*God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. *Tillotson.*The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal prison freed. Dryd.
Fix thy corporeal and internal eyeOn the young gnat, or new engender'd fly. *Prior.*2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporeal.I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Ainsbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political
one. *Swift.*CORPOREITY. n. s. [from corporeus, Latin.]

Materiality; the quality of being imbodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity. *Brown.*It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Scipius.

C O R

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stillingsfleet.

CORPORIFICATION. n. s. [from corporeifico.] The act of giving body or palpability.

To CORPORIFY. v. a. [from corporeifico, Lat.]

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporeified. Boyle.

CORPS. } n. s. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

1. A body.

That lewd ribauld

Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleene,
To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and sheene,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plentiful, all too little seems

To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corps. Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That scorns his brittle corps, and seems ashamed
He's not all spirit. Dryden.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend

Greet my poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown. Shakespeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd. Dryden's Fables.

See, where the corps of thy dead son approaches!
Addison.

The corps was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: He then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.

Cold numbness straight bereaves

Her corps of sense, and the air her soul receives. Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CORPULENCY. } n. s. [corpulentia, Lat.]

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fullness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdensome corpulency, my love had grown. Dodd.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Spissitude; grossness of inatter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail; the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Lat.]
Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when, with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh
the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Baron.

CORPUSCLE. n. s. [corpusculum, Lat.]

A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes. Newton.

Who knows what are the figures of the little

C O R

corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies? Waller's Logic.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from corp-
CORPUSCULARIAN. } pusculum; Lat.]

Relating to bodies; comprising bodies.
It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Bosc.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligently than the peripateticks. Bosch.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bosch.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.

To CORRADE. v. a. [corrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing;
to sorape together.

CORRADIATION. n. s. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradation, and conjunction of beams. Barrow's Nat. Hist.

To CORRECT. v. a. [corrigo, correction,
Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.
Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts
the confidence of sinning. Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lie, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Bosch.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what he wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Ray.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary is so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannise over us. Barrow.

As, in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet. Prior.

And keep the inward foe in quiet.
In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink its quality of relaxing may be corrected by being it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his.

Dryden.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete.

Felton.

CORRECTION. n. s. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shaks.

An offensive wife, :

That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,

As he is striking, holds his infant up,

And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm

That was uprear'd to execution. Shakspeare.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue.

Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction.

Arbutnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction.

Dryden.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places.

Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery.

Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take A dram of country's dullness; do not add Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad.

Donne.

CORRECTIONER. n. s. [from correction.]

One that has been in the house of correction; a jailbird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakspeare.

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy furnished correctioner!

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious alkali.

Arbutnot.

CORRECTIVE. n. s.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food.

Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow.

South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regimen which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that, with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof.

Male.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions, are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools.

Locke.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,

Correctly cold, and regularly low.

Pope.

CORRECTNESS. n. s. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design, in this statue, are inexpressible.

Addison.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.

Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness.

Swift.

CORRECTOR. n. s. [from correct.]

1. He that amends or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion!

Spratt's Sermons.

With all his faults, he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances.

Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults: as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author.

Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another: as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous vellifications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentine is a corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture.

Quincy.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from cor and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. s. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate.

South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Lat.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. s. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. s. [corripio, correptum, Latin.] Objection; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correction. Gouven. of the Tongue.

TO CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time. Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. } n. s. [from cor-
CORRESPONDENCY. } respond.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is, as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction. Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations, keep the same to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms. King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us. Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally proposed to keep? Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind, Five correspondent are to earth assign'd. Dryd.

CORRESPONDENT. n. s. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him, all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad. Denham's Dedication.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long isle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harri.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridor that went round it are almost intirely ruined. Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That may be altered or amended.

2. That is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language. Howd.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it sterile with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakspere's Othello.

CORRIVAL. n. s. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other. Spenser on Ireland.

He that doth redeem her thence, might wear Without corrival all her dignities. Shakspere.

CORRIVALRY. n. s. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.]

Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits; and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Bacon.

TO CORROBORATE. v. a. [con and roboro, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom. Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it. Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment. Wotton.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Watts.

CORROBORATION. n. s. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboration of the marriage. Bacon's Henry vi.

CORROBORATIVE. adj. [from corrobo- rate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperie, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried.

Wiseman's Surgery.

TO CORRODE. v. a. [corrodo, Latin.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode

The bad with bad, a spider with a toad;
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will.

Donne.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green-blue solution.

Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past,
And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast;
And with corroding juices, as he went,
A passage through the living rock he rent.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat, nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus.

Ray on the Creation.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind.

Arbutnot.

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,
Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise.

Thomson's Spring.

CORRO'SINLENESS. n. s. [from corrosibile.] Susceptibility of corrosion: rather corrodibility.

Dict.

CORRO'SION. n. s. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstrua here employed have a considerable moment or force. These li- quors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved: so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm.

Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature.

Bacon's Natural History.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it en- virones, that it contributes to their security and preservation.

Woodward.

CORRO'SIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Latin.] It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indif- ferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosives liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form.

Grew's Cosmologia.

The sacred sons of vengeance, on whose course Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year.

Thomson's Spring.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex.

If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corro- sive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great plea- sure when they behold that which they revere- rence is oppugned.

Hooker.

CORRO'SIVE. n. s.

If thou wilt bewail my woeful teen,
I shall thee give yond' cosset for thy pain. Spenser.

COST. n. s. [kost, Dutch. As this word is found in the remotest Teutonick dialects, even in the Islandick, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin con-sco; though it is not unlikely that the French cousset comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing.
2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders. Shakspeare.

Let foreign princes vainly boast
The rude effects of pride and cost
Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay. Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy. Sidney.

I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,
To ransom home revolted Mortimer. Shakspeare.
Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? 2 Samuel.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!
Put poor nature to such cost?
O! 't will undo our common mother,
To be at charge of such another. Cromwell.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it. South's Sermons.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,
Should win his supper at our common cost. Dryden's Fables.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible costs, I know not; what his latent, is variously conjectured. Swift.

4. Loss; fine; detriment.

What they had fondly wished, proved afterwards to their costs over true. Kneller.

To COST. v. n. pret. cost; particip. cost.
[couter, Fr.] To be bought for; to be had at a price.

The dagger and poison are always in readiness; but to bring the action to extremity, and then recover all, will require the art of a writer, and cost him many a pang. Dryden.

CO'STAL. adj. [costa, Lat. a rib.] Belonging to the ribs.

Hereby are excluded all cetaceous and cartilaginous fishes; many pectinal, whose ribs are rectilineal; and many costal, which have their ribs embowed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'STARD. n. s. [from caster, a head.]

1. A head.
Take him over the costard with the beak of thy sword. Shakspeare's Richard III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, graven, or sell ale. Burton on Melancholy.

CO'STIVE. adj. [constipatus, Latin;
constipe, French.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excre-tions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white. Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,
Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;
His case appears to me like honest Teague's,
When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

2. Close; impermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences.

CO'STIVENESS. n. s. [from costive.]
The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Cath-oerul dispenses malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body; occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Cotiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke.

COTSLINESS. n. s. [from costly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious costliness, yet with cleanly sufficiency, it entertained me. Sidney.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the costliness; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures. Glanville's Scipius.

COSTLY. adj. [from cost.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy; For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaks.

Leave for a while thy costly country-seat;

And, to be great indeed, forget

The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most costly piece of work on the earth, when completed. Addison.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most costly and desirable. Woodward.

COSTMARY. n. s. [costus, Lat.] An herb.

COSTREL. n. s. [supposed to be derived from coster.] A bottle. Skinner.

COT, COTE, COAT, at the end of the names of places, come generally from the Saxon cot, a cottage. Gibson.

COT. n. s. [cot, Sax. ceut, Welsh.] A small house; a cottage; a hut; a mean habitation.

What that usage meant,

Which in her cot she daily practised. F. Quar.

Besides, his cot, his flocks, and bounds of feed,

Are now on sale; and at our sheep cot now,

By reason of his absence, there is nothing

That you will feed on. Shaks. As you like it.

Hezekiah made himself stalls for all manner of beasts, and cots for flocks. 2 Chronicles.

A stately temple shoots within the skies;

The crotchets of their cot in columns rise;

The pavement, polish'd marble they behold;

The gates with sculpture grac'd, the spires and tiles of gold. Dryden's Baucis and Phil.

As Jove vouchsaf'd on Ida's top, 'tis said,

At poor Philemon's cot to take a bed. Fenton.

COT. n. s. An abridgment of cotquean.

COTA'NGENT. n. s. [In geometry.] The tangent of an arch which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

To COTE. v. a. This word, which I have found only in Chapman, seems to signify the same as To leave behind, To overpass.

Words her worth had prov'd with deeds,

Had more ground been allow'd the race, and coted far his steeds. Chapman's Iliad.

COTE'MPORARY. adj. [con and tempus,

Latin.] Living at the same time;

coetaneous; contemporary.

What would not, to a rational man cote- morary with the first voucher, have appeared probable, is now used as certain; because several have since, from him, said it one after another. Locke.

COTLAND. n. s. [cot and land.] Land appendant to a cottage.

COTQUEAN. n. s. [probably from coquin, French.] A man who busies himself with women's affairs.

Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica; Spare not for cost.—

—Go, go, you cotquean, go;

Get you to bed. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

A stateswoman is as ridiculous a creature as a cotquean: each of the sexes should keep within its bounds. Addison.

You have given us a lively picture of husbands hen-pecked; but you have never touched upon one of the quite different character, and who goes by the name of cotquean. Addison.

COTTAGE. n. s. [from cot.] A hut; a mean habitation; a cot; a little house.

The sea coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks. Zephaniah.

They were right glad to take some corner of a poor cottage, and there to serve God upon their knees. Hooker.

The self-same sun that shines upon his court, Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on both alike. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Let the women of noble birth and great fortunes nurse their children, look to the affairs of the house, visit poor cottages, and relieve their necessities. Taylor's Holy Living.

It is difficult for a peasant, bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the splendors of a court. South.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste, And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste. Pope.

COTTAGER. n. s. [from cottage.]

1. One who lives in a hut or cottage.

Let us from our farms

Call forth our cottagers to arms. Swift.

The most ignorant Irish cottager will not sell his cow for a groat. Swift's Addr. to Parliament.

2. A cottager, in law, is one that lives on the common, without paying rent, and without any land of his own.

The husbandmen and plowmen be but as their work-folks and labourers; or else mere cottagers, which are but housed beggars. Bacon.

The yeomenry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

COTTIER. n. s. [from cot.] One who inhabits a cot. Diet.

COTTON. n. s. [named, according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the mala cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence cottons, Ital. cotton, French.]

1. The down of the cotton-tree.

The pin ought to be as thick as a rowlingpin; and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Widman.

2. Cloth made of cotton.

COTTON. n. s. A plant.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus; from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. This cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk, or seed-vessel, growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude.

Miller.

To COTTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a nap.
2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel will end in one of you being turned off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another.

Swift.

To COUCH. v. n. [coucher, French.]

1. To lie down on a place of repose.
If I court more women, you'll couch with more men.

Shakespeare.

Doth not the gentleman
Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?

Shakespeare.

When love's fair goddess
Couch'd with her husband in his golden bed.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To lie down on the knees, as a beast to rest.

Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues.

Dryden's Virgil.

These, when death
Comes like a rushing lion, couch like spaniels,
With lolling tongues, and tremble at the paw.

Dryden.

3. To lie down in secret, or in ambush.
We'll couch i' th' castle ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.

Shakespeare.

The earl of Angus couch'd in a furrow, and was passed over for dead, until a horse was brought for his escape.

Hayward.

4. To lie in a bed, or stratum.
Blessed of the Lord be his land for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath.

Deut.

5. To stoop, or bend down; to lower in fear, in pain, in respect.

Genesis.

To COUCH. v. a.

1. To repose; to lay on a place of repose.
Where unbruised youth, with unstuffed brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.

Shakespeare.

2. To lay down any thing in a bed, or stratum.

If the weather be warm, we immediately couch malt about a foot thick; but if a hotter season require it, we spread it on the floor much thinner.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

The sea and the land make one globe; and the waters couch themselves, as close as may be, to the centre of this globe, in a spherical convexity.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. To bed; to hide in another body.

It is at this day in use at Gaza, to couch pot-herds, or vessels of earth, in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. To involve; to include; to comprise.
But who will call those noble, who deface,
By meaner acts, the glories of their race;
Whose only title to their fathers' fame
Is couch'd in the dead letters of their name?

Dryden's Juvenal.

That great argument for a future state, which St. Paul hath couch'd in the words I have read to you.

Atterbury's Sermons.

5. To include secretly; to hide: with under.

The foundation of all parables, is some analogy or similitude between the topical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing couch'd under it and intended by it.

South.

There is all this, and more, that lies naturally couch'd under this allegory.

L'Estrange.

The true notion of the institution being lost, the tradition of the deluge, which was couch'd under it, was thereupon at length suspended and lost.

Woodward's Natural History.

6. To lay close to another.

And over all with brazen scales was arm'd,
Like plated coat of steel, so couch'd near
That nought might pierce.

Spenser.

7. To fix the spear in the rest, in the posture of attack.

The knight gan fairly couch his steady spear,
And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might.

Spenser.

Before each van
Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears
Till thickest legions close.

Milton's Par. Lost.

The former wav'd in air
His flaming sword; Æneas couch'd his spear.

Dryden's Æneid.

8. To depress the condensed crystalline humour or film that overspreads the pupil of the eye. This is improperly called couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.

Some artist, whose nice hand
Couches the cataracts, and clears his eyes,
And all at once a flood of glorious light
Comes rushing on his eyes.

Domin.

Whether the cataract be wasted by being separated from its vessels, I have never known positively by dissecting one that had been couch'd.

Sharp.

- COUCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lie down dressed.

So Satan fell: and straight a fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew high;
Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air.

Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

To loll on couches rich with citron steds,
And lay their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

Dryden's Virg. Georgick.

O ye immortal pow'rs that guard the just,
Watch round his couch, and soften his repose!

Addison's Cato.

2. A bed; a place of repose.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans! Despair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forsook his early couch at early day.

Dryden.

3. A layer, or stratum.

This heap is called by maltsters a couch, or bed, of raw malt.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

- COUCHANT. adj. [couchant, Fr.] Lying down; squatting.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not probably a lion rampant, but rather couchant or dormant.

Erron.

As a tiger, who by chance hath spy'd
In some postieu, two gentle fawns at play, Straight couches close; then rising, changes
His couchant watch.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

COUCHEE. n. s. [French.] Bedtime; the time of visiting late at night.

None of her sylvan subjects made their court; Leaves and couches pass'd without resort. Dryd.

COVENANTE'E. n. s. [from covenant.] A party to a covenant; a stipulator; a bargainer.

Both of them were respective rites of their admission into the several covenants, and the covenantees become thereby entitled to the respective privileges. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COVENANTER. n. s. [from covenant.]

One who takes a covenant. A word introduced in the civil wars.

The covenanters shall have no more assurance of mutual assistance each from other, after the taking of the covenant, than they had before.

Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

CO'VENOUS. adj. [from covin.] Fraudulent; collusive; tricky.

I wish some means devised for the restraint of these inordinate and covenous leases of lands, holden in chief, for hundreds or thousands of years. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

TO COVER. v. a. [couvrir, French.]

1. To overspread any thing with something else.

The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys also are covered over with corn. Psalms.

Sea cover'd sea,

Sea without shore. Milton.

The flaming mount appear'd

In Dothan cover'd with a camp of fire. Milton.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come to dinner.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. To conceal under something laid over.

Nor he their outward only with the skins Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious, with his robe of righteousness Arraying, cover'd from his father's sight. Milt.

Cover me, ye pines!

Ye cedars, with innumerable boughs

Hide me! that I may never see them more. Milton.

In life's cool vale let my low scene be laid;

Cover me, gods, with Tempe's thickest shade!

Cowley.

Or lead me to some solitary place, And cover my retreat from human race. Dryd.

3. To hide by superficial appearances.

4. To overwhelm; to bury.

Raillery and wit serve only to cover nonsense with shame, when reason has first proved it to be mere nonsense. Watts.

Charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

1 Peter.

Thou may'st repent, And one bad act with many deeds well done May'st cover. Milton.

6. To shelter; to protect.

His calm and blameless life

Does with substantial blessedness abound,

And the soft wings of peace cover him round. Cowley.

7. To incubate; to brood on.

Natural historians observe, that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding time, and end a little after; that whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means amuses and diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison's Spectator.

8. To copulate with a female.

9. To wear the hat, or garment of the head, as a mark of superiority or independence.

That king had conferred the honour of grandee upon him; which was of no other advantage or signification to him, than to be covered in the presence of that king. Dryden.

CO'VER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing that is laid over another.

The secundine is but a general cover, not Y y 2 shaped according to the parts; the skin is shaped according to the parts. Bacon.

The fountains could be strengthened no other way than by making a strong cover or arch over them. Burnet's Theory.

Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfied with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers, and not finish'd yet.

Dryden's Juvenal.
With your hand, or any other cover, you stop the vessel so as wholly to exclude the air. Ray.
1. A concealment; a screen; a veil; a superficial appearance, under which something is hidden.

The truth and reason of things may be artificially and effectually insinuated, under the cover either of a real fact or of a supposed one. L'Estrange.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll intreat to lead me. Shakespeare.

Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within;
Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass. Cowley.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread. Dryd.
Sometimes providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it. South.

COVERLET. n. s. [couvertlet, Fr.] The outermost of the bedclothes; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lilies and in violets;
And silken curtains over her display,
And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets. Spenser.

This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,
Which with no costly coverlet they spread. Dryden's Fables.

I was, for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet. Swift.

COVERT. n. s. [from cover or couvert, Fr.]

1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Meab;
be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler. Isaiah.

There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain. Isaiah.

They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert according to the season; as was the Roman wont. Milton.

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down Under the hospitable covert night Of trees thick interwoven. Milton.

Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet; therefore retire them to covert. Bodley's Kalender.

2. A thicket, or hiding place.

'Tow'rd's him I made; but he was 'ware of it,
And stole into the covert of the wood. Shaksp.

Through this gloomy covert wide. Milton.

Thence to the coverts, and the conscious groves,
The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves. Dantes.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.

The deer is lodg'd; I've track'd her to her covert:

Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey. Addison's Cato.

COVERT. adj. [couvert, French.]

1. Sheltered; not open; not exposed.

You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley, upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden. Bacon.

The fox is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman, especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places. Martinet.

Together let us beat this ample field;
Try what the open, what the covert, yield. Pope.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.

And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered. Shakespeare.

By what best way,
Whether of open war, or covert guile,
We now debate. Milton's Paradise Lost.

COVERT. adj. [couvert, French.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband: as covert baron, feme covert.

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself! to have my body disabled, and my head fortified! Dryden.

COVERT-WAY. n. s. [from covert and way.]

It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way; because usually the besieged palisade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor; and sometimes the counterescarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp. Harris.

COVERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (so his foe was high)
Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise. Spenser.
How canst thou cross this marriage?

—Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me. Shakespeare.

Amongst the poets, Persius covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation. Dryden.

COVERTNESS. n. s. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy. Dick.

COVERTURE. n. s. [from covert.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other coverture, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb. Bacon's Natural History.

He saw their shame, that sought Vain covertures. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The winds being so fierce, and so severe, is not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in those islands, unless protected by walls or other like covertures. Woodward.

2. [In law.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation. Cowell.

The infancy of king Edward vi. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland.

Davies on Ireland.

TO COVET. v. a. [convoiter, French.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending man alive. Shakespeare.
I am yet

Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
O father! can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the gen'rous mind releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath?

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To desire earnestly.

All things coveting as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever; that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by offspring and propagation.

Hooker.

But covet earnestly the best gifts.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor, And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first, consiliiarii nati, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's house; but the ordinary sort of counsellors are as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and wihal of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him in his ordinary government.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law ; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal and statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince how far his prerogative extends.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CO'UNSELLORSHIP. n. s. [from counsellor.]

The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship. Bacon.

I learn

Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends
Bear in their superscription: in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their heads. Milton.

General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our stock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.

True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit. Rasselas.

CO'UNTERFEIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another; an impostor.

I am no counterfeit: to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man. Shakespeare.

This priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in fit answers to questions, to come near the resemblance. Bacon.

But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear
Some counterfeit in this your Jupiter. Addison.

2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.

My father was I know not where,
When I was stamp'd. Some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeiter; yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time. Shakspeare.

There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something real; though pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tillotson.

CO'UNTERFEITER. n. s. [from counterfeit.] A forger; one who contrives copies to pass for originals.

TO COUNTERMA'RK. v. a. [from counter and mark.]

A horse is said to be countermarked, when his corner teeth are artificially made hollow, a false mark being made in the hollow place, in imitation of the eye of a bean, to conceal the horse's age. Farrier's Dict.

COUNTERMI'NE. n. s. [from counter and mine.]

1. A well or hole sunk into the ground, from which a gallery or branch runs out under ground, to seek out the enemy's mine, and disappoint it. Military Dict.

After this they mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouths; but the citizens made a countermine, and therein they poured such a plenty of water that the wet powder could not be fired. Hayward.

2. Means of opposition; means of counteraction.

He thinking himself contemned, knowing no countermine against contempt but terror, began to let nothing pass, which might bear the colour of a fault, without sharp punishment. Sidney.

3. A stratagem by which any contrivance is defeated.

The matter being brought to a trial of skill, the countermine was only an act of self-preservation. L'Estrange.

TO COUNTERMI'NE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To delve a passage into an enemy's mine, by which the powder may evaporate without mischief.

2. To counterwork; to defeat by secret measures.

Thus infallibly it must be, if God do not mivacuously countermine us, and do more for us than we can do against ourselves. Deacy of Piety.

COUNTERMOTION. n. s. [counter and motion.] Contrary motion; opposition of motion.

That resistance is a countermotion, or equivalent to one, is plain by this; that any body which is pressed, must needs press again on the body that presses it. Digby on the Soul.

If any of the returning spirits should happen to fall foul upon others which are outward bound, these countermotions would upset them, or occasion a later arrival. Collier.

COUNTERMUR. n. s. [contremur, Fr.] A wall built up behind another wall, to supply its place.

The great shot flying through the breach, did beat down houses; but the countermur, new built against the breach, standing upon a lower ground, it seldom touched. Knolles.

Our spoils we have brought home Do more than counterpoise a full third part The charges of the action. Shakspere.

The force and the distance of weights counterpoising one another, ought to be reciprocal. Digby.

2. To produce a contrary action by an equal weight.

The heaviness of bodies must be counterpoised by a plummet fastened about the pulley to the axis. Wilkins.

3. To act with equal power against any person or cause.

So many freeholders of English will be able to beard and to counterpoise the rest. Spenser.

COUNTERPOISE. n. s. [from counter and poise.]

1. Equiponderance; equivalence of weight; equal force in the opposite scale of the balance.

Take her by the hand, And tell her she is thine: to whom I promise A counterpoise; if not in thy estate, A balance more replete. Shakspere.

Fastening that to our exact balance, we put a metalline counterpoise into the opposite scale. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The state of being placed in the opposite scale of the balance.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales, Wherein all things created first he weigh'd; The pendulous round earth, with balance'd air In counterpoise. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Equipollence; equivalence of power. The second nobles are a counterpoise to the higher nobility, that they grow not too potent. Bacon.

Their generals, by their credit in the army, were, with the magistrates and other civil officers, a sort of counterpoise to the power of the people. Swift.

COUNTERPOISON. n. s. [counter and poison.] Antidote; medicine by which the effects of poison are obviated.

Counterpoisons must be adapted to the cause; for example, in poison from sublimate corrosive, and arsenick. Arbutnot.

COUNTERPRESSURE. n. s. [counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,
That troops of stoms from all parts around,
Of equal number, and of equal force,
Should to this single point direct their course;
That so the counterpressure, ev'ry way
Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,
And by a steady poise the whole in quiet lay?

Blackmore.

COUNTERPRO'JECT. n. s. [counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch.

Swift.

To COUNTERPRO'VE. v. a. [from counter and prove.] To take off a design in black lead, or red chalk, by passing it through the rolling-press with another piece of paper, both being moistened with a sponge.

Chambers.

1. The defence or resistance of a horse, that intercepts his cadence, and the measure of his manage. Farrier's Dict.
2. Defence; opposition.

Let cheerfulness on happy fortune wait,
And give not thus the countertime to fate. Dryd.
COUNTERTU'R.N. n. s. [counter and turn.]

The catastasis, called by the Romans stasis, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the countertura; which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you. Dryden.

To COUNTERVAIL. v. a. [contra and valco, Lat.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off. Hobbs.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;

Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,

And him with equal valour countervail'd. Fairfax.

The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other. Wallis's Dissol.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniencies that go along with it.

L'Estrange.

COUNTERVA'IL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.
2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review; which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever. South's Sermon.

COUNTERVIE'W. n. s. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere thus was sinn'd and judg'd on earth,

Within the gates of hell sat Sin and Death
In countervieus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Contrast; a position in which two dissimilar things illustrate each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in countervieus or contrast with that of the other company. Swift.

To COUNTERWO'RK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole;

That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That disappoints the effect of ev'ry vice. Pope.

CO'UNTESS. n. s. [comitissa, Lat. countess, Fr.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.

—It is; and all the rest are countesses. Shaks.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you while she was living, and so gratefully honoured after she was dead. Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. s. [count and house.]

The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought in them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cumbering their counting-house, put them upon emptying them. Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O! were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Shakespeare.

But, oh! her mind, that orcs which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses.

Dante.

By one countless sum of woes oppress,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn:
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return.

Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.

Pope's Odyssey.

COUNTRY. n. s. [contrée, Fr. contrata, low Latin, supposed to be contracted from conterrata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed.

Spratt.

a. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect,
Nature alone should be the architect;
She 'd build it more convenient than great,
And, doubtless, in the country chuse her seat.

Cowley.

I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country.

Spenser.

3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round;

Hang those that talk of fear.

Shakespeare.

4. The place of one's birth; the native soil.

The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country.

Spratt.

O, save my country, heav'n! shall be your last.

Pope.

5. The inhabitants of any region.

All the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; all their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford.

Shakespeare.

COUNTRY. adj.

1. Rustick; rural; villatick.

Cannot a country wench know, that, having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal?

Locke.

I never meant any other than that Mr. Trot should confine himself to country dances.

Spratt.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood.

Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd, that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man.

Locke.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house.

Locke.

The low mechanicks of a country town do somewhat outdo him.

Locke.

Come, we'll e'en to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love.

Norris.

2. Of an interest opposite to that of courts: as, the country party.

3. Peculiar to a region or people.

She, laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language.

2 Maccabees.

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.

We make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar.

Dryden's Dufrenoy.

COUNTRYMAN. n. s. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground.

Locke.

See, who comes hither?

My countryman; but yet I know him not.

Shak.

Homer, great bard! so fate ordain'd, arose;

And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,

Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,

And set their battles in eternal light.

Prior.

The British soldiers act, with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman.

Addison on the War.

2. A rustick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country.

Grant.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn.

L'Estrange.

CO'UNTY. n. s. [comté, Fr. comitatus,
Latin.]

1. A shire; a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice.

Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts.
Of these counties four are termed county-pala-tines; as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged.
There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Lichfield.
County is, in another signification, used for the county-court.

Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,

As we will ours.

Shakespeare.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman and her fatherless children.

Addison's Spectator.

2. An earldom.

3. [compté.] A count; a lord. Obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The county Paris.

Shakespeare.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester; and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liber; ad gladium sicut rex tenet Angliam ad coronam.

Doct.

COUPE'E. n. s. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. s. [couple, French; copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where Fledge my wife; I'll go in *couple*s with her;
Than when I feel and see, no further trust her. Shakespeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in *couple*s; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and yours, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ascham.

A piece of chrystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the *couple*s three Ever true in loving be: Shakespeare.

Oh! alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as You gracious couple do. Shakespeare.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married *couple*s are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon.

He said: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley.

TO COUPLE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.]

1. To chain together.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakespeare.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in store,
To couple coming harms with sorrow past. Sidney.
And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable. Shakspeare.
Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus.

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. 1 Peter.

Their concerns were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have, made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhymes when he should be mending his own soul and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you so coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction. Sidney.

I am just going to assist with the archbishop, in degrading a parson who *couple*s all our beggars, by which I shall make one happy man. Swift.

TO COUPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

Thou, with thy lusty crew,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race. Milb.
That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance,

Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. s. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

COUPLEST. n. s. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and,
holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices; which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six,
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, poor take him and his wit! Swift.

2. A pair, as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove
Ere that her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping. Shakespeare.

COURAGE. n. s. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare.

Their discipline
Now mingled with their courage. Shakespeare.
Hope arms their courage; from their woe
they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day. Amos.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St.
Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury.

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakespeare for outrageous.

He is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Shakespeare.

COURAGEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.]

Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign: the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him. Bacon.

COURAGEOUSNESS. n. s. [from courageous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

Nicanor, hearing of the manliness and the courageousness that they had to fight for their country, durst not try the matter by the sword. 2 Mac.

COURANT. } n. s. [courante, Fr.] See COURANTO. } CORANT.

1. A nimble dance.

I'll like a maid the better, while I have a tooth in my head: why, he is able to lead her a couranto. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing that runs quick, as a paper of news.

TO COURB. v. n. [courber, French.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication. Not in use.

In the fatness of these pury times, Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg; Yea, courb and woo, for leave to do it good.

CO'URIER. n. s. [courier, Fr.] A messenger sent in haste; an express; a runner.

I met a courier, one mine ancient friend. Shakespeare's Timon.

This thing the wary bassa well perceiving, by speedy couriers advertised Solymán of the enemy's purpose, requesting him with all speed to repair with his army to Tauris. Kneller.

COURSE. n. s. [course, Fr. cursum, Lat.]

13. Method of life; train of actions.

A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; for otherwise it would have been terrible. Sidney.

His addiction was to courses vain: His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow; His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

As the dropsy-man, the more he drinks, the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink; even so a sinner, the more he sins, the apter is he to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness. Perkins.

Men will say,

That baseabout Emma vagrant courses took, Her father's house and civil life forsook. Prior.

14. Natural bent; uncontrolled will.

It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases. Temple.

So every servant took his course, And, bad at first, they all grew worse. Prior.

15. Catamenia.

The stoppage of women's courses, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropsy, or some other dangerous disease. Harvey on Consumptions.

16. Orderly structure.

The tongue defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature. James.

17. [In architecture.] A continued range of stones, level or of the same height, throughout the whole length of the building, and not interrupted by any aperture. Harris.

18. Series of consequences.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy sir, thou bleed'st: Thy exercise hath been too violent For a second course of fight. Shakespeare.

Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full chargers offer to the god. Dryd.
You are not to wash your hands till after you have sent up your second course. Swift.
So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear

Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there.
Pope.

20. Regularity ; settled rule.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none ; their vows and promises are no more than words of course. L'Estrange.

22. Of course. By consequence.

With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect : whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way ;
and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth, to me. Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.

Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and
power ;

No muse is proof against a golden shower. Garth.
Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors. Swift.

TO COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt ; to pursue.

The big round tears

Cour'd one another down his innocent nose

In piteous chase. Shakespeare.

The king is hunting the deer ; I am courting myself. Shakespeare.

Where's the thane of Cawdor ?

We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor. Shakespeare.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

It would be tried also in flying of hawks ; or in courting of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds.

Bacon's Natural Hist.

I am continually starting hares for you to course : we were certainly cut out for one another ; for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up. Congreve.

3. To put to speed ; to force to run.

When they have an appetite

To venery, let them not drink nor eat,

And course them off, and tire them in the heat.

May's Virgil.

TO COURSE. v. n. To run ; to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The nat'ral gates and alleys of the body. Shaks.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice ; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakespeare.

She did so course o'er my exteriours, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass. Shaks. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,

And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden.

All, at once

Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend,

And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,

All ether courting in a maze of light. Thomson.

CO'URSER. n. s. [from course ; coursier, French.]

1. A swift horse ; a war horse : a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his coursers strong.

And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong. Spenser.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursiers, born of heav'nly breed ;
Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire. Dryd.

Th' impatient coursier pants in ev'ry vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain ;
Hills, vales, and floods, appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.

A leash is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound. Hamm.

COURT. n. s. [cour, Fr. koert, Dutch ;
curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides ;
the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires :

Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn ; epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. Lucius.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court : the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one. Prior.

A supplicant to your royal court I come. Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference

That holds this present question in the court ?
Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought into the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state. Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts : a green court plain, with a wall about it ; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall ; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall. Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him), for fear the stage should be cleared and the scenes broken. Dryden.

4. A small opening enclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings to advise them. Taylor.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

Shakespeare's Henry 8th

The archbishop

Of Canterbury, accompanied with other

Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable. Shakspeare.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron held in that behalf. Spectator.

2. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did board.
Spenser.

Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er bend

Thy frailer virtue, to betray thy friend?

Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did:

Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.

Dryden's Aureng.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master by offering that which they love best themselves.

Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing.

Swift to Gay.

3. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

4. COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;

Seem to fly it, it will pursue:

So court a mistress, she denies you;

Let her alone, she will court you. Ben Jonson.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,

The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.

Dryden's Æneid.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love

To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?

Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling
vestal

While she beholds the holy flame expiring.

Addison's Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,

A thousand court you, though they court in vain.

Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.

Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. s. [from court and chap- lain.] One who attends the king to band.

Shakspeare.

COURT-LADY. n. s. [from court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.

The same study, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes or fashion is to a court-lady.

Locke.

COURTEOUS. adj. [from courtois, French.]

Elegant of manners; polite; well-bred;
full of acts of respect.

He hath deserved worthily of his country;
and his ascent is not by such easy degrees, as those who have been supple and courteous to the people.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

They are one while courteous, civil, and obliging; but, within a small time after, are supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious.

South.

COURTEOUSLY. adv. [from courteous.]

Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.

He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed, yet he let them courteously pass.

Watson.

Whilst Christ was upon earth, he was not only easy of access, he did not only courteously receive all that addressed themselves to him, but also did not disdain himself to travel up and down the country.

Calamy's Sermons.

Alcinous, being prevailed upon by the glory of his name, entertained him courteously.

Broom.

town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan.

Shak.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtezans, nor any thing of that kind;
nay, they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things.

Bacon.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtesan.

Watson.

Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her.

Addison.

COURTESY. n. s. [from courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:

It must appear in other ways than words,

Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.

Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.

Peacock.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.

Clarendon.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters; than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it first was nam'd.

Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,

That through the court his courtesy was blown.

Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time

You call'd me dog; and, for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.

Shakspeare.

Repose you there; while I to the hard house Return, and force their scant courtesy.

Shak.

When I was last at Ereter,

The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that musick let us all embrace;
For, heav'n to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy. Shakespeare.
Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.
Some country girl, scarce to a court'sy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on 't is,
I endeavoured to make her look something christian-like. Congrave's Old Bachelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others: as, to hold upon courtesy.
5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seised of land, and getteth a child of her, that comes alive into the world; though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England. Cowell.

To CO'URTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and court'sies there to me.
Shakespeare.

The petty traffickers,
That court'sy to them, do them reverence.
Shakespeare.

ladies.
If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly court'sy to each other. Prior.

CO'URTIER. n. s. [from court.]
1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.—
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one. Shakespeare.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier. Shakespeare.
You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs. Bacon.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants. Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What
Made thee, all honour'd honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capitol? Shakespeare.
There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III.; not out of fear, but wisdom. Suckling.

CO'URTINE. See CURTAIN.

CO'URTLIKE. adj. [court and like.] Elegant; polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Garden's Remains.

CO'URTLINESS. n. s. [from courtly.]
Elegance of manners; grace of mien;
complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in, is courtliness. Lord Digby to Sir Kinsland Digby.

CO'URTLY. n. s. [from court.] A courtier; a retainer to a court.
Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.
Ben Jonson.

CO'URTLY. adj. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

In our own time (excuse some courtly mine)
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pep.

CO'URTLY. adv. In the manner of courts;
elegantly.

They can produce nothing so courtly with, or which expresses so much the conversation of a gentleman, as sir John Suckling. Dryden.

CO'URTSHIP. n. s. [from court.]

1. The act of soliciting favour.
He paid his courtship with the crowd
As far as modest pride allow'd. Swift.
2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shak.
In tedious courtship we declare our pain,
And, ere we kindness find, first meet disdain.
Dryden.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit. Addison.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.
My courtship to an university,
My modesty I give to soldiers bare;
My patience to a gamester's share. Dana.

CO'USIN. n. s. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus,
Latin.]

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or a sister.

Macbeth unseam'd him.—
Oh valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Shak.
Tybalt, my cousin! O, my brother's child!
Unhappy sight! alas, the blood is spill'd!
Of my dear kinsman. Shakespeare.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
And cousin german to great Priam's seed. Shak.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. s. [in the plural anciently kin, or keen, now commonly cowes; cu, Sax.
koe, Dutch.] The female of the bull;
the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, in the most part, are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and cows milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wierman's Surgeon.

'Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cow,
He sought himself some hospitable house:
Good Cretan entertain'd his godlike guest.
Dryden's Fables.

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb

Untimely ripp'd—

Accused be that tongue that tells me so!

For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shak.

By reason of their frequent revolts, they have done upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cowed their spirits. Horvel's Vocal Forest.

For when men by their wives are cow'd, Their horns of course are understood. Hudib.

COW-HERD. n. s. [cow, and hynd, Sax. a keeper.] One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW-HOUSE. n. s. [cow and houie.] The house in which kine are kept.

COWARD. n. s. [coward, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltroon; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Musidorus to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar, knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another; as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South. Tremble ye not, oh friends! and cowards fly, Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew, And rais'd the house with loud and coward cries. Shakespeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy, And ill-foreseen the present bliss destroy. Prior.

COWARDICE. n. s. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame, Thus for to blot the honour of the dead; And with foul cowardice his carcase shame, Whose living hands immortalis'd his name. Fairy Queen.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame, And cowardice alone is loss of fame:—

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown; But 't is the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryd.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Rever.

COWARDLINESS. n. s. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

COWARDLY. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

COWARDLY. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knollys.

COWARDSHIP. n. s. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness. Not in use.

A very paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakespeare.

To COWER. v. n. [courrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, then he cowers down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon.

The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,

And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakespeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld, Approaching two and two; these cowering low With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame sits cowering o'er a kitchen fire; I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryden.

COWISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit, That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare.

COWKEEPER. n. s. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Brown.

COWL. n. s. [cugla, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friery cowl in a cornfield. Camden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend: a wise man and a fool. Pope.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. s. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff, Which (tossing him something high) He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster. Wiceman.

CO'WSLIP. n. s. [paralysis; curly and lippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose. Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I; In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare.

Thy little sons Permit to range the pastures: gladly they Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet. Philips.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. s. A species of mullein.

CO'XCOMB. n. s. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head. As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the patty alive; she rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a stick, and cried, Down, wantons, down! Shakespeare.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shaks.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her, By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind, Tokens and letters, which she did resent. Shak.
I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly, Quarter or counsel from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters. L'Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees; and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools; And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools. Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

COXCO'MICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word, unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. adj. [coi, French; from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jason is as coy as is a maide; He looked piteously, but nought he said. Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass, A foe of folly and immodest toy; Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser.
Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy: Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

The Nile's coy source. Grægor.

To COY. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again! No more; but make me happy to my gust, That is, without your struggling. Dryden.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.— —Thus to coy it! Rom.

With one who knows you too! 2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To COY. v. a. [for decoy.] To allure. Not in use.

I'll mountebank their loves, Coy their hearts from them, and come home beloved.

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare.

CO'YLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said, his hand he coyly snatch'd away From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman.

CO'YNES. n. s. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun bath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and she putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags. Waller.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign, And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

CO'YSTREL. n. s. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trust, their common wrogs to wreak:

The musket and the coystrel were too weak, Too fierce the falcon. Dryden.

COZ. n. s. A cant or familiar word, extracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shakespeare.

To CO'ZEN. v. a. [To coze is in the old Scotch dialect, as Janius observes, to chop or change; whence cozes, to cheat; because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Shakespeare.
Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to public mirth for having been cozened. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same to himself that maliciously and corruptly does to cozen it. L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poets say; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Johnson.

C R A

C R A

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryd.
Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters; and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Locke.

CO'ZENAGE. n. s. [from cozen.] Fraud;
deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat;
the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage;
As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters. Shakespeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument.

Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty tall,
It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago

Like certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new.

Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits without the least suspicion of their cozenage.

Glanville's Sceptis.

Strange cozenage! none would live past years
again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.

Dryd. Aur.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. s. [from cozen.] A cheater;
a defrauder.

Indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves me to be wary. Shaks.

CRAB. n. s. [cjabba, Sax. krabbe, Dut.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off, and crumble away by degrees. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Magnus saith he himself was an eye-witness of. Derbam.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble stock

Was graft with crab tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakespeare.

Fetch me a dozen crab tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches. Shakespeare.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakespeare.

'Till why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent. Taylor.

3. A peevish morose person.

4. A wooden engine with three claws for launching of ships, or heaving them into the dock. Phillips.

vides,

And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.

Creech.

C R A B. adj. It is used by way of contempt for any sour or degenerate fruit: as, a crab cherry, a crab plum.

Better gleanings their worn soil can boast
Than the crab vintage of the neighb'ring coast.

Dryden.

C R A'BED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose; cynical; sour.

A man of years, yet fresh, as mote appear;
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser.
O, she is

Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed;
And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakespeare.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when

Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love. Shakespeare.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose;
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,
And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;
Whate'er the crabbed st author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius
Are against gods, you know. Prior.

rant, and the craber, which some call the water-
rat. Walton's Angler.

C R A B S-EYES. n. s. Whitish bodies, rounded on one side and depressed on the other, heavy, moderately hard, and without smell. They are not the eyes of any creature, nor do they belong to the crab, but are produced by the common crawfish: the stones are bred in two separate bags, one on each side of the stomach. They are alkaline, absorbent, and in some degree diuretick.

Hill.

Several persons had, in vain, endeavoured to store themselves with crabs-eyes.

Boyle.

1. A sudden disruption, by which the parts are separated but a little way from each other.

2. The chink, fissure, or vacuity, made by disruption; a narrow breach.

Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wiceman.

At length it would crack in many places;
and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark, sky-colour. Newton's Opticks.

3. The sound of any body bursting or falling.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Now day appears, and with the day the king,
Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest

Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,
And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast.

Dryden.

4. Any sudden and quick sound.

A fourth?—start, eye!

What, will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?

Shakespeare.

Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Addis.

2. To break; to split.

O, madam, my heart is crack'd, it's crack'd.

Shakespeare.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes.

Shakespeare.

Should some wild fig-tree take her native bent,

And heave below the gaudy monument,
Would crack the marble titles, and disperse
The characters of all the lying verse. Dryden.

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings

Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Honour is like that glassy bubble
That finds philosophers such trouble;
Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,
And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras.

3. To do any thing with quickness or smartness.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes.

—Pope.

As boys to venture on the unknown ice
That crackles underneath them. Dryden.

Caught her dishevell'd hair and rich attire;
Her crown and jewels crackled in the fire. Dryden's Est.

Marrow is a specifick in that scurvy which occasions a crackling of the bones; in which as marrow performs its natural function of mending them. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CRACKNEL. n. s. [from crack.] A hard brittle cake.

Albee my love he seek with daily sute,
His clownish gifts and curtesies I disdain,
His kids, his cracknels, and his early fruit. Spenser.

Pay tributary cracknels, which he sells;
And with our offerings help to raise his rattle. Dryden's Jernall.

CRADLE. n. s. [cnabel, Saxon.]

1. A moveable bed, on which children or sick persons are agitated with a smooth and equal motion, to make them sleep.

She had indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Shakespeare.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed and procreant cradle.
Shakespeare.

His birth, perhaps, some paltry village hides,
And sets his cradle out of fortune's way. Dryd.
A child knows his nurse and his cradle, and by degrees the playthings of a little more advanced age. Locke.

The cradle and the tomb, alas, so nigh!
To live is scarce distinguish'd from to die. Prior.
Me let the tender office long engage,
To rock the cradle of reposing age;
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath, Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death. Pope.

2. It is used for infancy, or the first part of life.

He knew them to be inclined altogether to war; and therefore wholly trained them up, even from their cradles, in arms and military exercises. Spenser's Ireland.

In a retreat he outruns any lacquey; then, in coming on, he has the cramp.

Shakespeare.

The cramp cometh of contraction of sinews; which is manifest, in that it cometh either by cold or dryness.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Hares, said to live on hemlock, do not make good the tradition; and he that observes vertigoes, cramps, and convulsions, follow them in these animals, will be of our belief.

Brerew.

2. A restriction; confinement; obstruction; shackle.

A narrow fortune is a cramp to a great mind, and lays a man under incapacities of serving his friend.

L'Estrange.

3. A piece of iron bent at each end, by which two bodies are held together.

To the uppermost of these there should be fastened a sharp grapple, or cramp of iron, which may be apt to take hold of any place where lights.

Wilkins.

CRAMP. adj. Difficult; knotty: a low term.

To CRAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pain with cramps or twitches.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, it's then

A waterish humour swell'd, and ooz'd again.

Dryden's Virg.

2. To restrain; to confine; to obstruct; to hinder.

It is impossible to conceive the number of inconveniences that will ensue, if borrowing be cramp'd.

Bacon.

There are few but find that some companies benumb and cramp them, so that in them they can neither speak nor do any thing that is handsome.

Glasville's Scrip.

He who serves has still restraints of dread upon his spirits, which, even in the midst of action, cramps and ties up his activity.

South's Ser.

Dr. Hammond loves to contract and cramp the sense of prophecies.

Burnet's Theory.

The antiquaries are for cramping their subjects into as narrow a space as they can, and for reducing the whole extent of a science into a few general maxims.

Addison on Italy.

Marius used all endeavours for depressing the nobles, and raising the people; particularly for cramping the former in their power of judicature.

Swift.

No more
Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold;
But full of life, and vivifying soul.

Thomson.

3. To bind with crampirons.

CRA'MPISH. n. s. [from cramp and fish.]

The torpedo, which benumbs the hands of those that touch it.

CRA'MPIRON. n. s. [from cramp and iron.]

See CRAMP, sense 3.

CRA'NAGE. n. s. [cranagium, low Lat.]

A liberty to use a crane for drawing up wares from the vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it. It signifies also the money paid and taken for the same.

Cowell.

CRANE. n. s. [crann, Sax. kraen, Dut.]

1. A bird with a long beak.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter.

Lucian.

That small infantry warr'd on by cranes.

Milton.

2. An instrument made with ropes, pullies, and hooks, by which great weights are raised.

In case the mould about it be so ponderous as not to be removed by any ordinary force, you may then raise it with a crane.

Mortimer.

Then commerce brought into the publick walk
The busy merchant, the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong cranes.

Thomson's Autumn.

3. A siphon; a crooked pipe for drawing liquors out of a cask.

CRANES-BILL. n. s. [from crane and bill.]

1. An herb.

2. A pair of pincers terminating in a point, used by surgeons.

CRANIUM. n. s. [Latin.] The skull.

In wounds made by contusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to crowd in dossils; for if that contused flesh be well digested, the bone will incarn with the wound without much difficulty.

Wise man's Sur.

CRANK. n. s. [This word is perhaps a contraction of crane-neck, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crane.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down; so that on the last turning down a leather thong is slip't, to tread the treddle-wheel about.

Moxon.

2. Any bending or winding passage.
I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart; to th' seat o' th' brain;

And, through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency Whereby they live.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek
And love to live in simple sleek.

Milton.

CRANK. adj. [from onkrack, Dut. Skin-ner.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to cranky. Not in use.

They looken bigge, as bulls that been bate,
And bearen the crag so stiff and so state
As cockle on his dunghill crowing cranks.

Spens.

2. Among sailors, a ship is said to be crank, when, by its form of the bottom, or by being loaded too much above, it is liable to be overset. [from kranch, Dut. sick.]

To CRA'NKLE. v. n. [from crank, as it signifies something bent.] To run in and out; to run in flexures and windings.

See how this river comes me crankling in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half moon, a monstrous cantle, out!

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To CRA'NKLE. v. a. To break into unequal surfaces; to break into angles.

Old Vaga's stream,

Forc'd by the sudden shock, her wonted track

Forsook, and drew her humid train aslope, Crankling her banks.

Philips.

CRANKNESS. n. s. [from crank.]

1. Health; vigour.

2. Disposition to overset.

CRA'NNIED. adj. [from cranny.] Full of chinks.

A wall it is, as I would have you think,

That had in it a crannied hole or chink. Shaks.

A very fair fruit, and not unlike a citron; but somewhat rougher chopt and crannied, vulgarly conceived the marks of Adam's teeth.

Brown.

CRA'NNY. n. s. [cren, Fr. crena, Lat.]

A chink; a cleft; a fissure.

The eye of the understanding is like the eye of the sense; for as you may see great objects through small crannies or holes, so you may see great axioms of nature through small and contemptible instances.

Bacon's Natural Hist.

And therefore beat and laid about,

To find a cranny to creep out.

Hudibras.

In a firm building, the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, but with brick or stone fitted to the crannies.

Dryden.

Within the soaking of water and springs, with streams and currents in the veins and crannies.

Burnet's Theory.

He skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garrets, and he peeped into every cranny.

Arbutnot.

CRAPE. n. s. [crepa, low Latin.] A thin stuff, loosely woven, of which the dress of the clergy is sometimes made.

And proud Roxana, fir'd with jealous rage,
With fifty yards of craps shall sweep the stage.

Swift.

To thee I often call'd in vain,

Against that assassin in craps.

Swift.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn;

A saint in craps is twice a saint in lawn.

Pope.

CRA'PULENCE. n. s. [crapula, a surfeit, Lat.] Drunkenness; sickness by intemperance.

Diet.

CRA'PULOUS. adj. [crapulosus, Latin.]

Drunken; intemperate; sick with intemperance.

There shall be a great crashing from the hills.

Zephaniah.

When convulsions cleave the lab'ring earth,

Before the dismal yawn appears, the ground

Trembles and heaves, the nodding houses crash.

Smith.

To CRASH. v. a. To break or bruise.

My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montague, I pray you come and crash a cup of wine.

Shakespeare.

Mr. Warburton has it, crush a cup of wine.

To crash, says Hanmer, is to be merry: a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout. It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n. s. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senseless liliu,

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash, Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear.

Shakespeare.

Moralizing sat I by the hazard-table: I looked upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crash of worlds, with as much contempt as ever Plato did. Pope.

CRA'SIS. n. s. [κρῆσις.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him.

Glasville.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger; as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis, and constitution of the blood and spirits. South.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Lat.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Iron, in aquafortis, will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication; as also a crass and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it. Woodward.

CRA'SSITUDE. n. s. [crassitudo, Latin.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for, if they have a greater crassitude, they will alien in their own body, though they spend not. Bacon.

The Dead Sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk. Bacon's Natural History.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the sea water, and partly by its constant agitation. Woodward.

CRASTINA'TION. n. s. [from cras, Lat. to-morrow.] Delay. Dict.

CRATCH. n. s. [creche, Fr. crates, Lat.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

When, being expelled out of Paradise by reason of sin, thou wert held in the chains of death; I was inclosed in the virgin's womb, I was laid in the cratch, I was wrapped in swathing cloaths. Hakewill on Providence.

CRAVA'T. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] A neckcloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scour'd,
And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;
Which others for cravats have worn
About their necks, and took a turn. Hudibras.

The restrictives were applied, one over another, to her throat; then we put her on a cravat. Wismann's Surgery.

To CRAVE. v. a. [cravian, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole Litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein crawed at God's hands?

Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;

But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter. Shaksp.

The poor people, not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed. Kassler.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed. L'eto.

Each ardent nymph the rising current crave,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting wave. Prin.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd, the more their prices gave,

Th' advantage only took the more to crave.

Denham.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,
Is ever craving, and will still be poor?

Who cheats for halfpence, and who doffs his coat
To save a farthing in a ferry-boat? Dryden.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and success of cravings and satiety. L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it by some wicked action. South.

4. To call for importunately.

Bestow

Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakspere.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution are acids, taken in too great quantities; sour eructations; and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love;
But more would prove

This heart too little, that too great. Southey.

CRA'VEN. n. s. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a cockcomb? —

—A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.

—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven. Shakspere.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

—He is a craven and a villain else. Shakspere.

CRA'VEN. adj. Cowardly; base.

Upon his coward breast

A bloody cross, and on his craven crest

A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly. Spenser.

Whether it be

Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And ever three parts coward. Shakspere.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find,

From cowardice, not ruth, did that proceed;

His noble foes durst not his craven kind

Exasperate by such a bloody deed. Fairfax.

To CRA'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter

There is a prohibition so divine

That cravens my weak hand. Shakspere's Crak.

CRA'VER. n. s. [from crave.] An importunate asker. It is used in Clarissa.

To CRAUNCH. v. a. [schrautsen, Dutch;

whence the vulgar say more properly is scraunch.] To crush in the mouth.

The word is used by Swift.

CRAW. n. s. [kroe, Danish.] The crop or first stomach of birds.

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, or at least into a kind of anto-stomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds. Ray on the Creation.

CRAWFISH. n. s. [sometimes written crayfish, properly crevice; in French ecrevisse.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope.

The common crawfish, and the large sea crawfish, both produce the stones called crabs-eyes. Hill.

To CRAWL. v. n. [krielen, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill. Milton.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryden.

The streams, but just contain'd within their bounds,

By slow degrees into their channels crawl;
And earth encrasses as the waters fall: Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Grew's Cosmologia.

The vile worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man! Prior.

2. To move weakly and slowly, or timorously.

'T is our first intent
To shake all cares and business from our age,
While we unburthen'd crawl toward death. Shakespeare's King Lear.

They, like tall fellows, crept out of the holes;
and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Kneller.

For the fleets of Solomon and the kings of Egypt, it is very apparent they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore-side. Heylin.

A look so pale no quartane ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryden's Juvenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Arbutnot's John Bull.

'Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile reptile, weak and vain!
A while he crawls upon the earth,

Then shrinks to earth again. Pope.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

3. To advance slowly and slyly.

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. Shaks. Henry VIII.

4. To move about hated and despised.

Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his sith, before that undressed tribunal? South.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race, Crawl through the street, shov'd on or rudely
press'd
By his own sons, that pass him by unblest'd! Pope.

CRAWLER. n. s. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

CRAWFISH. n. s. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the muriatick and armoniack saltness requires slimy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crayfishes. Floyer.

CRA'YON. n. s. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon. Dryden's Duffrenoy.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

To CRAZE. v. a. [ecraser, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration, the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of popish parents, doth seem crazed. Hooker.

Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lysander, yield Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakspeare.

Till length of years,

And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs. Milten.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,

God looking forth, will trouble all his host,

And craze their chariot wheels. Milten.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruisheth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,
No father his son dearer, true to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakspeare.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction: and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits; only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. s. [from crazed.] Decepidtude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

CRA'ZINESS. n. s. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Hovel's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrasé, French.]

1. Broken; decrepited.

Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness and for crazy age. Shakspeare.

When people are crazy, and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken-witted; shattered in the intellect.

CRE

The queen of night, whose large command
Rules all the sea and half the land,
And over moist and crazy brains,
In high spring-tides, at midnight reigns. Hudib.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Physick can but mend our crazy state;
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryd.
Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered? Wake.

CREAGHT. n. s. [An Irish word.]

In these fast places, they kept their creaghts, or herds of cattle; living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage. Davies.

To CREAGHT. v. n.

It was made penal to the English to permit the Irish to creaght or graze upon their lands, or present them to ecclesiastical benefices. Davies.

To CREAK. v. n. [corrupted from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,

On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dry.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire;
- They fried with heat, and I with fierce desire.

Dryden.

CREAM. n. s. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shakespeare.

I am as vigilant, as a cat to steal cream. Shaks.

Cream is matured and made to rise speedily,
by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How the drudging goblin sweats,
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milt.

Let your various creams incircled be
With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree.

King

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream; and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor, called skimmed milk. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing; as, the cream of a jest.

To CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To skim off the cream.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

To CREAM. v. n. To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion.
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shaks.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and face.]

Pale; coward-looking.

Thou cream-fac'd lown,

Where got'st thou that goose-look? Shakespeare.

CREAMY. adj. [from cream.] Full of cream; having the nature of cream.

CRE'ANCE. n. s. [French.] In falconry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's lash when she is first lured.

CRE

CREASE. n. s. [from creta, Latin, chalk.
Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp pen-knife would go out of the crease, and disfigure
the paper. Swift.

To CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

To CREATE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Geni.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Lock.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion of.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight.

Shakespeare.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was his enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies. King Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light: Decay of Piety.

None knew, till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were. Racine.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate?

Dryden's Aurengzeib.

Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbutnot.

3. To beget.

And the issue there create

Ever shall be fortunate. Shakespeare.

4. To invest with any new character.

Arise, my knights o' th' battle: I create you Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates. Shaks.

5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proposition of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron.
Davies on Ireland.

CREATION. n. s. [from create.]

1. The act of creating, or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, express'd in all the emanations of his providence;
in his creation, in his conservation of us. Faylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then the whole creation came,
And from their natures Adam then did name.

Dante.

Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry
grace,

Reflecting, Moses-like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation bless'd.

Dryden's F. No.

Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year.
Dryden's Virgil.
In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men.
Parad.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but A dagger of the mind, a false creation
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CREA'TIVE, adj. [from create.]
1. Having the power to create.
But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson's Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.
To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.
CREA'TOR, n. s. [creator, Latin.] The being that bestows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors: let in
The great Creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milt.
When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful Creator: and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CREA'TURE, n. s. [creatura, low Latin.]
1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the Creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures? Stillingfleet.

2. Any thing created.
God's first creature was light. Bacon.
Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

But for his love, and for her own self sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spens.
Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
I, O, Tantalus, I here tormented lie! Spenser.
Tho' he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscom.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.
He would into the stews,

And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shaks. Richard II.
I've heard that guilty creatures at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies; idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature! and then kiss me hard.
Shakspeare.

Ah, cruel creature! whom dost thou despise?
The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies.
Dryden's Virgil.

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.

Frequent. Dict.

CRE'DENCE, n. s. [from credo, Latin;
credence, Norman French.]

1. Belief; credit.
Ne let it seem that credence this exceeds:
For he that made the same was known right well
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Spenser.

Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakspeare.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl; but the friar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their

Deaf to complaints, they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryd.

2. The point of time at which any affair comes to the height.

This hour 's the very crisis of your fate.
Your good or ill, your infamy or fame,
And all the colour of your life, depends
On this important now. Dryden.

The undertaking, which I am now laying down, was entered upon in the very crisis of the late rebellion; when it was the duty of every Briton to contribute his utmost assistance to the government, in a manner suitable to his station and abilities. Addison's Freeholder.

CRISP. adj. [crispus, Latin.]

1. Curled.

Bulls are more crisp on the forehead than cows. Bacon.

The Ethiopian black, flat nosed, and crisp haired. Hale.

2. Indented; winding.

You nymphs call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,

Leave your crisp channels, and on this green
land
Answer your summons; Juno does command. Shaksp.

3. Brittle; friable.

In frosty weather, musick within doors soundeth better; which may be by reason, not of the disposition of the air, but of the wood or string of the instrument, which is made more crisp, and so more porous and hollow. Bacon.

TO CRISP. v. a. [crispo, Latin.]

1. To curl; to contract into knots or curls.

C R I

Severn, affrighted with their bloody looks;
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp'd head in the hollow bank.

Shaksp. Henry IV.

Young I'd have him too;
Yet a man with crisp'd hair,
Cast in thousand snares and rings,
For love's fingers, and his rings. Ben Jonson.

CRITERION. n. s. [κρίτειον.] A mark by which any thing is judged of, with regard to its goodness or badness.

Mutual agreement and endearments was the badge of primitive believers; but we may be known by the contrary criterion. Glanville.

We have here a sure infallible criterion, by which every man may discover and find out the gracious or ungracious disposition of his own heart. South.

By what criterion do you eat, d' ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink?
Pope's Horace.

CRITICK. n. s. [κρίτικος.]

1. A man skilled in the art of judging of literature; a man able to distinguish the faults and beauties of writing.

This settles truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious arguments of criticks. Locke.

Now learn what morals criticks ought to show,
For 't is but half a judge's task to know. Pope.

2. An examiner; a judge.

But you with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

3. A snarler; a carper; a caviller.

Criticks I saw, that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place. Pope.

Where an author has many beauties consistent with virtue, piety, and truth, let not little criticks exalt themselves, and shower down their ill-nature. Watts.

4. A censurer; a man apt to find fault.

C R I

My chief design, next to saving you, is to be a severe critic on you and your neighbour.

Swift.

CRIT'ICK. adj. Critical; relating to criticism; relating to the art of judging of literary performances.

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,

But critick learning flourish'd most in France.

Pope.

CRIT'ICK. n. s.

1. A critical examination; critical remarks; animadversions.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to continue his good offices, and write such another critick on any thing of mine.

Dryden.

I should as soon expect to see a critique on the posy of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal.

Addison on Medals.

2. Science of criticism.

If ideas and words were distinctly weighed, and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of logic and critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with.

Locke.

What is every year of a wise man's life, but a critique and critique on the past?

Pope.

Not that my quill to criticks was confin'd;
My verse gave ampler lessons to mankind.

Pope.

To CRIT'ICK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play the critick; to criticize.

They do but trace over the paths that have been beaten by the ancients; or comment, critick, and flourish, upon them.

Temple.

CRIT'ICAL. adj. [from critick.]

1. Exact; nicely judicious; accurate; diligent.

It is submitted to the judgment of more critical ears, to direct and determine what is graceful and what is not.

Holder.

Virgil was so critical in the rites of religion, that he would never have brought in such prayers as these, if they had not been agreeable to the Roman customs.

Stillington.

2. Relating to criticism: as, he wrote a critical dissertation on the last play.

3. Captious; inclined to find fault.

What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?

—O, gentle lady, do not put me to 't;

For I am nothing, if not critical.

Shakespeare.

4. [from crisis.] Comprising the time at which a great event is determined.

The moon is supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or secretory days to be dependent on that number.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

5. Decisive; nice.

Opportunity is in respect to time, in some sense, as time is in respect to eternity: it is the small moment, the exact point, the critical minute, on which every good work so much depends.

Spratt's Sermons.

The people cannot but resent to see their apprehensions of the power of France, in so critical a juncture, wholly laid aside.

Swift.

6. Producing a crisis or change of the disease; as, a critical sweat.

CRIT'ICALLY. adv. [from critical.]

1. In a critical manner; exactly; curiously.

To CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently.

Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character; Without all this at once before your eyes, Censur you may, but never criticise.

Pope.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so earnestly into these accounts as to take occasion from thence to criticise on his experience.

Locke.

To CRITICISE. v. a. To censure; to pass judgement upon.

Nor shall I look upon it as any breach of civility to criticise the author, so long as I keep clear of the person.

Addison.

CRITICISM. n. s. [from critick.]

1. Criticism, as it was first instituted by Aristotle, was meant a standard of judging well.

Dryden's Innocence, Preface.

2. Remark; animadversion; critical observations.

There is not a Greek or Latin critick who has not shewn, even in the stile of his criticism, that he was a master of all the eloquence and delicacy of his native tongue.

Addison.

To CROAK. v. n. [craezzan, Saxon; crocare, Italian; crocitare, Latin.]

1. To make a hoarse low noise, like a frog.

The subtle swallow flies about the brook,
And querulous frogs in staudy pools do croak.

May's Virgil.

So when Jove's block descended from on high,
Loud thunder to its bottom shook the boy,
And the hoarse nation croak'd.

Pope.

Blood, stuff'd in skins, is British charism food;
And France robs marshes of the croaking brood.

Gay.

2. To caw, or cry as a raven or crow.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements.

Shakespeare.

The hoarse raven, on the blasted bough,
By croaking from the left, presag'd the coming blow.

Dryden.

At the same time the croak of elms, with the croaking of the ravens, has an exceeding solemn and venerable.

Addison.

3. It may be used in contempt for any disagreeable or offensive murmur.

Their understandings are but little instructed, when all their whole time and pains is laid out to still the croaking of their own bellies.

Lath.

CROAK. n. s. [from the verb.] The cry or voice of a frog or raven.

The swallow skins the river's watery face:
The frogs renew the croaks of their languid race.

Dryden.

Was that a raven's croak, or my son's voice?
No matter which; I'll to the grave, and hide me.

Lath.

Aye, crookback, here I stand to answer thee,
 Or any be the proudest of thy sort. Shaksp.

CRO'OK BACKED. adj. Having bent shoulders.

A dwarf as well may for a giant pass,
 As negro for a swan; a crookback'd lass
 Be call'd Europa. Dryden's Farnal.

There are millions of truths that a man is not, or may not think himself, concerned to know; as, whether our king Richard III. was crook-backed or no. Locke.

CRO'OKED. adj. [crocher, French.]

1. Bent; not straight; curved.

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the sight of the sounding body; and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes, as through straight ones. Newton's Opticks.

Mathematicians say of a straight line, that it is as well an index of its own rectitude as of the obliquity of a crooked one. Woodward.

2. Winding; oblique; anfractuous.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.

Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,
The glow-worm lights his gem. Thomson.

3. Perverse; untoward; without rectitude of mind; given to obliquity of conduct.

They have corrupted themselves: they are a perverse and crooked generation. Deut.

Hence, heap of wrath; foul, indigested lump!
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shak.

We were not born crooked; we learned those windings and turnings of the serpent. South.

CROOKEDLY. adv. [from crooked.]

1. Not in a straight line.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth even thereby discern what is crooked; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness. Hooker.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness or spot, any uncleanness or deformity, in their sacrifice.

Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

CROP. n. s. [crop, Saxon.] The claw of a bird; the first stomach into which its meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray.

But fluttering there, they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

CROP. n. s. [enoppa, Saxon.]

1. The highest part or end of any thing; as, the head of a tree, the ear of corn.

2. The harvest; the corn gathered off a field; the product of the field.

And this of all my harvest hope I have,
Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care. Spenser.

Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,
Corn, wine, and oil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds,
Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow. Roscommon.

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

Guildless of steel, and from the razor free,
It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee. Dryd.

TO CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

3. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds.

By crystal streams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline. Shakspeare.

We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them. Bacon's Natural History.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime
On the crystalline sky, in saphir throne'd

Illustrious far and wide. Milton.

CRYSTALLINE HUMOUR. n. s. The second humour of the eye; that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres; of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex; and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. s. [from crystallize.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified, according to the nature and texture of the salts. The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shape; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is aged enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that, let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them resume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily digest them of their saltness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation—or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water; which has brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Watts.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.]

To cause to congeal or concreate in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or shoot into crystals. Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast, generally of a bear or fox.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear.

Shakespeare.

This night, wherein the cab-drawn bear would couch;

The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakespeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cub, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost:

One as a mountain vast; and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?

Shakespeare.

O most comical sight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's shop last night; but such two unlicked cubs!

Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown gorge with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

CUBATION. n. s. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

CUBATURE. n. s. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. s. [from κῦβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number. All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities; this common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew.

CUBE Root. } n. s. The origin of a CUBICK Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. s. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromattick smell, and is acrid to the taste. Cubebs are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromatticks, as cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]
CUBICK. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given yet of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical, numbers. Brown.

CUBICALNESS. n. s. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed her cubiculary beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. s. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmét.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature; and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and highth. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbutnot.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight, Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies; the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. s. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

These, mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. s. [cocus, French, from coukoo.] One that is married to an adultrass; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory far 't.

Shakespeare's Othello.

There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been stuc'd in 's absence.

Shakespeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryd.
Ever since the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed, behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shaksp. Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with Amazonian pace;
For that 's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryd.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shaks.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. s. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckoldmaker, let me hope never to see a chine again. Shaksf.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryd. Spanish Friar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. s. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryden.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

CUCKOO. n. s. [cuculus, Lat. cuculus, Welsh; cocu, French; kochock, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plain-song cuckoo gray;

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer, Nay. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare.

I deduce,

From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of spring; and touch a thorn Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Theom.

2. 'It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to prize him so for running!—A horseback, ye cuckos; but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Slat.

CUCKOO-BUD.

n. s. [cardaminis,

CUCKOO-FLOWER. } Latin.] The name of a flower.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hung

Do paint the meadows much bedight. Slat.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds. Slat.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. s. [cuckoo and spittle.]

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodsear, is that spume dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CU'CULATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hood-

CU'CULATED. } ed, Latin.]

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capotes upon the head and back. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

CU'CMUMBER. n. s. [cucumis, Lat.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell shaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments: of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but each a large style in the middle, charged with the semen; others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinate, which is divided into three or four cells, including many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turkey cucumber. Misc.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep.

Dryden's Virg.

CUCURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon. Chemist.

CU'CURBITE. n. s. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a hep, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbita. Quint.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbita, fitted with a capacious head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbita glass, upon which pour the strong aqua fortis. Martius.

CUD. n. s. [cud, Saxon.] That food which is repositied in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle were hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

You range the pathless wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryd.

CUE

CU'DDEN. } n. s. [without etymology.]
CU'DDY. } A clown; a stupid rustick;
 a low dolt; a low bad word.

The slaving cudden, propp'd upon his staff,
 Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryd.
TO CU'DDLE. v. n. [a low word; I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
 Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
 She cuddles low behind the brake;
 Nor would she stay, nor dares she fly. Prior.

CU'DGEL. n. s. [Audse, Dutch.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle:
 yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of stones
 And cudgels to thy hide and bones:
 Tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
 His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryd.
 This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel.
Locke.

The wise Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel playing. Arbutnot.

2. TO CROSS THE CUDGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel- players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross
 the cudgels or to be baffled in the conclusion.
L'Estrange.

TO CU'DGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
 Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife.
Swift.

2. TO BEAT IN GENERAL.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
 And, though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudib.

CU'DLE. n. s. A small sea fish.

Of round fish there are britt, sprat, cudles, eels.

Carver.

CU'DWEED. n. s. [from cud and weed.]

UE. n. s. [queue, a tail, French.]

The tail or end of any thing: as, the long curl of a wig.

The last words of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

CUFF

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakspeare.

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
 That he should weep for her? What would he do,
 Had he the motive and the cue for passion That I have? he would drown the stage with tears. Shakspeare.

Let him know how many servants there are,
 of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
 Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
 Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakspeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party.

Rymer's Tragedies of the Last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low
 word.

CUERPO. n. s. [Spanish.] To be in cuervo, is to be without the upper coat, or cloak, so as to discover the true shape of the cuervo or body.

Expos'd in cuervo to their rage,
 Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. s. [zuffa, a battle; zuffare, to fight, Italian.]

1. A blow with the fist: a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book;
 And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
 The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
 That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakspeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuff in the question. Shakspeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbutnot.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuff again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

TO CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,
 While the peers cuff to make the rabble sport.
Dryden's Jove and Juno.

TO CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him.—
 —Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shakspeare.

Were not you, my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congrave's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
 Sit only watchful with their heavy wings

To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
 To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Orway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
 With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring;
 Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryd.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,

And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food.
Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

Hovering about the coasts, they make their moan,

And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own.

Dryden's Æneid.

CUFF. n. s. [cocffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, short cuff, and a peaked beard.

Arbutnot.

CUI'NAGE. n. s. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places.

Cowell.

CUTRASS. n. s. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay;

And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,

And sign'd his bosom with a purple tint.

Dryd.

CUIRA'SSIER. n. s. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown;

Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor, on each horn,

Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight.

Milton.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUISH. n. s. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,

His cuishes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,

Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The croset some, and some the cuishes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold.

Dryden's Æneid.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuishes to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour?

Dryden.

CU'LDRES. n. s. [colidei, Lat.] Monks in Scotland.

CU'LERAGE. n. s. The same plant with arse-smart.

Ainsworth.

CU'LINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire.

Newton.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture.

Arbutnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being culled out for themselves; if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God.

Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent

Against the brows of this resisting town:

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,

To cull the plots of best advantage.

Shaks.

Like the bee culling from ev'ry flow'r,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouthswith honey.

Shakespeare.

I do remember an apothecary

In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brow, Calling of simples. Shaks. Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shakspeare.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, the grand charter was extracted. Head.

When false flow'rs of rhetorick thou wast's cull,

Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryd.

From his herd he culls,

For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls.

Dryden's Fop.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the trades in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Let.

With humble duty, and officious haste,

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repose. Pier.

The various off'rings of the world appear:

From each she nicely culls with curious toil,

And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil. Pope.

CULLER. n. s. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CULLION. n. s. [coglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion. It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,

And makes a god of such a cullion. Shaks.

Up to the breach, you dogs! Arbutnot, you cullions! Shakspeare.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you: you whorescan, cullionly, barber-monger; drow.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

CULLUMBINE. n. s. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Müller.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;

Her neck, like to a bunch of columbines. Spenser.

CULLY. n. s. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon, &c. by sharper or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits

Are furnish'd with all perquisites,

B' allow'd to put all tricks upon

Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:

They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryd.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed in lawful cully. Arbutnot.

To CU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus and ferre, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with simple, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quay.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Wardour.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, &c., maize, panic, millet. Arbutnot.

TO CULMINATE. v. a. [culmen, Latin.]

To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:

For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon Culminate from the equator. Milton's Par. Lost.

CULMINATION. n. s. [from culminate.]

The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. s. [from culpable.]

Blamableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin.]

1. Criminal.

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glo'ster,
Than from true evidence of good esteem
He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shaks.

2. Guilty; with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Ire.

3. Blamable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CULPABLENESS. n. s. [from culpable.]

Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blamably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily. Taylor.

CULPRIT. n. s. [about this word there is a great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paraît, May it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim.
Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and, by pleading and asserting too boldly he may displease the court. Prior.

CULTER. n. s. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.
Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery. Shak.

TO CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. s. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion;
melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil; which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required, to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. s. [from cultivate.]

One who improves, promotes, ame-liorates or endeavours to forward, any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle.

CULTURE. n. s. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of
it. 2 Esdras.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If reap
our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.
Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun;
Then to the culture of the willing globe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skillful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Tatler.

TO CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cultivate; to manure; to till.
It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULVER. n. s. [columba, Lat. culpe, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

Whence, borne on liquid wing,
The sounding culver shoots. Thomson's Spring.

CULVERIN. n. s. [colovarine, French.]

A species of ordnance: originally a hawk.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy
To see our prince his matchless force employ:

CUM

No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,
But 't is already more than half the mail;
And such a fury from his arm 't has got,
As from a smothering calverin 't were shot.

Waller.

CUM'LVERKEY. n. s. A flower.

Looking down the meadows, I could see a girl cropping salverbrys and cowslips, to make garlands.

Wallen's Angler.

To CUM'BER. v. a. [kommeren, komben, ren, to disturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.
Why asks he what avails him not in fight,
And would but cumber and retard his flight,
In which his only excellence is plac'd?
You give him death that intercept his haste.

Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears, Clogg'd with his cloaths, and cumber'd with his years.

Dryden.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumber'd with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding.

Lacks.

- a. To crowd or load with something useless.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance.

Shakespeare's Timon.

The wise man's cumbrance, if not share; nor apt

To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do ought may merit praise.

Milton.

CUM'EROUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud of cumbersome goats do him molest,
All striving to infix their feeble stings;
That from their noyance he no where can rest.

Spenser.

2. Oppressive; burdensome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much! Bent rather, how I may be quit, Fairest and easiest, of this cumbersome charge.

Milton.

They rear'd him from the ground,
And from his cumbersome arms his limbs unbosom'd;
Then lanc'd a vein.

Dryden.

Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbersome weight.

Spenser.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtle net, Enwrapped in foul smock, and clouds more black than jet. Spenser.

And there beside of marble stone was built
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery;

On which true christians blood was often spilt,
And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser.

Once put out thy light,
Thou cunning'st at pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relumine. Shaks. Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; sly; designing; trickish; full of fetches and stratagems; subtle; crafty; subdolous.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite: and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wise. Bacon.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it: they are resolved to be cunning: let others run the hazard of being sincere. South.

4. Acted with subtily.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled; accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falsehood. Sidney.

CUNNING. n. s. [cunninge, Saxon.]

1. Artifice; deceit; seliness; sleight; craft; subtily; dissimulation; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, wherof you speak? Sidney.

We take cunning for a sinister or crooked wisdom; and certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. Bacon.

Discourage cunning in a child; cunning is the ape of wisdom. Locke.

2. Art; skill; knowledge; right-hand cunning.

CUNNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.] Artfully; sily; subtly; by fraudulent contrivance; craftily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and dispersed a bruit and rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown and the king fled; whereby it was supposed that many succours were cunningly put off and kept back.

Bacon's Henry vii.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;
But cunningly and closely. Denham's Sophy

When stock is high, they come between,

CURRENT. n. s.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides, Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But when his fair course is not hindered, He makes sweet music with th' enamell'd stones. Shakspere.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast, Whose fame in thine, like lesser current, 's lost; Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes, To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Denham.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays, While through the sky his shining current strays. Pope.

2. [In navigation.]

Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly, or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current with or against the way of the ship. Herrick.

3. Course; progression.

The castle of Cادمus was taken, and Theseus invested, by Phobidas, the Lacedemonian, suddenly; which drew on a surprize of the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war even into the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CURRENTLY. adv. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits pervened beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. s. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

- CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Mason, after his manner, was very merry with both parties; pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters. Ausban's Schoolmaster.

Curst cows have short horns. Promord.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewishness;

I am a right maid for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shakespeare.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough,
Is that she is intolerably curst,

And shrewd and froward; so beyond all measure,
That, were my state far worse than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shak.
When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it, with curst speech
I threaten'd to discover him. Shakespeare.

And though his mind
Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Crasbow.
CURSTNESS. n. s. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,
Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness grow to the matter. Shakespeare.
Her mouth she with'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.
TO CURTAIL. v. a. [curto, Latin.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

3. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world. Shakespeare.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,
And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings; and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact, his antagonist, had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact, but Faction. Addison.

CURTAIL Dog. n. s. A dog loured, or mutilated according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in coursing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me
to a curtail dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel.
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

CURTAIN. n. s. [cortina, Latin.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light, to conceal or discover any thing, to shade
a bed, to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arbutnot on Dict.

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray,
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great Dulness! lets the curtain fall,
And universal darkness buries all. Pope.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it, so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspense. Bornet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good-night. Pope.

3. To open it, so as to discern the object.

So soon as the all-cheering sun
Should in the farthest east begin to draw
The shady curtain from Aurora's bed. Shaksp.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morn'g dawn;
Then the curtain will be drawn. Crasbow.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions. Military Dict.

The governor, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers. Kauler.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. s. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred!
The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed. Dryden's Jernon.

She ought to exert the authority of the *cur-

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. s. [from cattle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hammer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shakespeare's Henry v.

CYCLE. n. s. [cyclos, Latin; κύκλος, Greek.]

1. A circle.
2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Boyle's Calendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and excentrick, scribbled o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CYCLOID. n. s. [from κύκλος; of κύκλος, and ειδής shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CYCLOPEDIA. n. s. [κύκλος and παιδεία.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYGNET. n. s. [from cycnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death. Shakespeare's King John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Cygnets from grey, turn white. Bacon.

Young cyphs are good meat, if larded with sauce; but fed with weeds they taste fishy.

Mariner's Turbidity.

CYLINDER. n. s. [κύλινδρον.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder, for vaulted tombs,
and house buildings. Præben.

CYLINDRICAL. } adj. [from cylinder.]

CYLINDRICK. } Partaking of the nature of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalachia, when several of the cylindrick striae are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called brushiron ore.

Woodward.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastic fibres are both smallest, and those glands which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrick canals. Arbutnot.

CYMAR. n. s. [properly written simar.]
A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymar,
Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryd.

GYMATIUM. n. s. [Lat. from κύματιον, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice, the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentilli, make a noble show by their graceful projections.

Spectator.

CYMBAL. n. s. [cymbalum, Lat.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes,
Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans;
Make the sun dance. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
If mirth should fall, I'll busy her with cares,
Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne.

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

CYNANTHROPY. n. s. [κύνων, κύων, and άνθρωπος.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNARCTOMACHY. [κύνων, αρκτικός, μάχη.]
A word coined by Bulter, to denote bear-baiting with a dog.

That some occult design doth lie

In bloody cynarctomachy,

Is plain enough to him that knows

How saints lead brothers by the nose. Hudib.

CYNEGETICKS. n. s. [κύνων, κυνηγία.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant, in Greek, four books, of cy-negeticks, or venation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CYNICAL. } adj. [κύνων.] Having the CYNICK. } qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new-fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CYNICK. n. s. [κύνων.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rascall man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilely doth this guy shine!

Get you hence, Arrah: saucy fellow, hence.

Shakespeare.

Without these precautions the man degener-ates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette;
the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent and facetious. Atkins.

CYNOSURE. n. s. [from κύνος.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees,

Bosom'd high in tufted trees;

Where perhaps some beauty lies,

The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CYON. See CION.

Gather cyon for garb before the buds open.

Emlyn.

CYPRESS-TREE. n. s. [cypressus, Latin.]

1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use; its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous.
Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies.
The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten.

Catbert.

In story coffers I have stuff my crowns;

In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shel.

He taketh the cypress and the oak, which be strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Isaiah.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,

And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,

Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

CYPRUS. n. s. [I suppose, from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,

Cyprus black as e'er was crow.

Shakespeare.

A cypress, not a bosom,

Hides my poor heart!

Shakespeare.

CYST. } n. s. [κύστις.] A bag containing

CYSTIS. } some morbid matter.

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shew'd itself by its matter to be a meliceris. Wicam.

There may be a consumption, with a paraly-siting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbutnot on Det.

CYSTICK. } adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cystick, or the contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbutnot.

CYSTOTOMY. n. s. [κύστις, and τομή.] The act or practice of opening cystick tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

A sable cloud abswart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.

Neither will a spirit that dwells with stars, dabble in this impure mud. Gloverville's Apol.

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Esrange.

But when he found the boyatt play,
And saw them dabbling in their clay,

He stood behind a stall to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work. Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them: though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, & have had more reverence for the writer and the printer, and left every thing standing. Atterbury to Pope

DA'BBLER. n. s. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.
2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift.

DACE. n. s. [of uncertain derivation; in most provinces called dars: luciscus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the bank
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;

Where I may see my quill or cork down sink,
With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Warton.

DA'CTYLE. n. s. [δαιτύλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger: as, candídus.

DAD. } n. s. [The child's way of DA'DDY. } expressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and d, or the kindred letter d, differently placed; as tad, Welsh; erla, Greek; atta, Gothick; tata, Latin.] Father.

I was never so bethumped with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shakespeare.

His loving mother left him to my care;
Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To DAD. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro. Drayton.

DA'DAL. adj. [dadalus, Latin.]

1. Various; variegated.
2. Skilful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated.

Nor hath
The dadal hand of nature duly pow'd.
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FFODIL. } n. s. [supposed DA'FFODILLY. } by Shupper to be

DA'FFODOWNPILLY. } corrupted from asphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the embelement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or gourdish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

DAG

Strew me the green ground with daffodown-dillies,
And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies.
Spenser.

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies.
Milton.

The daughters of the food have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:
The short narcissus, and fair daffodil,
Fancies to please the sight, and easie sweet to smell.
Dryden.

TO DAGG. v. a. [contracted from do aft; that is, to throw back, to throw off.]
To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades; that dast the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
I would she had bestowed this dotage on me;
I would have dast all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakespeare.

DAG. n. s. [dague, French.]

1. A dagger.

2. A hand-gun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger; being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

DA'ILY. adj. [daglic, Sax.] Happening every day; or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince.
Shakespeare.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief
From daily trouble and continued grief. Prior.

DA'ILY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read;
And daily how, through hardy enterprise,
Many great regions are discovered. Fairy Queen.

A man with whom I conversed almost daily for years together. Dryden.

DA'INTILY. adv. [from dainty.]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world half so stately and daintily as candle-light. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is no region on earth so daintily watered, with such great navigable rivers. Hend.

Those young suitors had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily.

Broom's View of Epick Poem.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DAINTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste; and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense: For even the ears of such as have no skill Perceive a discord, and conceive offence; And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Down.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that maketh dainty,

I'll swear hath corns. Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

DAI

Therefore to horse!

And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately, beautiful.

My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands.

Shakspeare.

Why should ye be so cruel to yourself;
And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine: in contempt.

Your dainty speakers have the curse,
To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. s.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

The shepherd swains, with sure abundance
blest,

On the fat flock: and rural dainties feast. Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why, that's my dainty: I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakspeare.

There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And set thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. s. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth
Than the coarse and country dairy. Ben Jonson.

That doth haunt the hearth or dairy.
What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryden.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewived, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. s. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:
The dairymaid enquires if she shall take
The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryd.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of sir Roger's dairy- maids. Addison.

DA'ISY. n. s. [bægeceage, day's eye.

Cbaucer.] A spring flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtusé cones. Müller.

DAL

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And ladysmocks all over white,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shaksp.
As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and daisy-eyes to behold him. Howell.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies
spring;

Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground. Pope.

This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. n. s. [dalei, Gothick; dah, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toss'd with storms, and beat with bitter
winds,

High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wand'ring many a wood, and measur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale, a pleasing region not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.
Tickel.

He steals along the lonely dale. Thomson.

DA'LLIANCE. n. s. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance Too much the rein; the strongest oaths are straw

To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as becoms
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way;
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Duesa dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r.

Fairy Queen.

That bower not mystick, where the sapient
king

Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Milton.

Thou claim'st me for thy sire;
And my fair son here show'et me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakspeare.

DA'LLIER. n. s. [from dally.] A trifter; a fondler.

The daily dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made.

Archam.

DA'LLOP. n. s. [of unknown etymology.]
A tuft, or clump. Not in use.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallops till time ye do bind.

Tusser.

To DALLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

D A M

Take up thy master:

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakspeare's King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'T is now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calvary's Sermons.

- One hundred thousand pounds must be raised;
for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.
2. To exchange carcases; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
Nor on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtiers,
Nor meditating with two deep divines. Shakspeare.

3. To sport; to play; to frolic.
She her sister buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns: the sun.
Shakspeare.

4. To delay.
They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Windsor.

To DALLY. v. a. To put off; to delay;
to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service, not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Knight's History.

DAM. n. s. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperor, he should never his dame have be-shing. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dams runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wall her darling loss.
Shakspeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dams, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time:
and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together; which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Key.

2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;

It is the issue of Polixenus:
Hence with it, and, together with the dams,
Commit them to the fire. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. s. [dams, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a skreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood Rears, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the corn away. Dryden.
Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store;
Bear down the dams, and open every door.
Dryden.

The inside of the dams must be very smooth and straight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [Damen, gobernador, Seg. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

D A M

I'll have the current in this place dams'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakspeare.

Home I would go,

But that my doors are hateful to my eyes;
Fill'd and dams'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as towers when their game will spring.
Orson.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'T is you must drive that trouble from your soul;

As streams, when dams'd, forget their ancient current,

And, woodring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakspeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou dams'st it up, the more it burns. Shakspeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite dams'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long level'd rule of streaming light.
Milton.

DAMAGE. n. s. [domage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Great errors and absurdities many commit: be wary of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commit do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual rap-and extortion. Dorset.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispossessed hear'n,
My damages fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been so-tained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoil taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice!
Addison.

5. In law.

Any hurt or hindrance that a man takes in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to inquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal case, they are likewise asked their sentences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Green.

When the judge had awarded the damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's ox had broken, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Milton.

To DAMN. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt;
to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely submerged, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

D A M

To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DA'MASCENE. n. s. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry-tree in blossom, the damascens and plum-trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruit the white commonly is meener, as in pear-plums and damascens; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DA'MASK. n. s. [damasquin, Fr. damascino, Ital. from Damascus.]

Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast in disper, damask, or in lyne. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit, Her damask late, now chang'd to purest white. Fairfax.

DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

To form flowers upon stuffs.

To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours, And, damasking the ground with flowers, With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Poet.

To adorn steel-work with figures; practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. s. The rose of Damascus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud, nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks, nor, shower'd from ev'ry bush, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DAMASKENING. n. s. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and necks of pistols. Chambers.

DA'ME. n. s. [dama, Fr. dama, Spanish.] A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The second dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use now a dame, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank the country. Watts's Logic.

D A M

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known, Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakespeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakespeare.

Shut your mouth, dame. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Milk.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

His father Faunus; a Laurentian dame His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryden.

Who would not repeat that bliss, And frequent sight of such a dame Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be That vulcure in you to devour so many As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shaks.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. s. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Milker.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn; to censure.

His own impartial thought Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend To clasp with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit, Phoebus gives them full privilege alone To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are so good a critic, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and, next, that you are not so errant a critic as to damn them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damno.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the mazes of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death, And to transport him in the mind he is Woe damnable. Shakespeare.

As he does not reckon every echism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shakespeare.

D A M

DAMNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnable, in respect of those consequences that arise from them. South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestowed upon them, the more damnable their conserves stunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. s. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Taylor.

Now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DAMNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DAMNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hatel; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest. Shaksp.
But, O! what damned minutes tells he o'er Who doats, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shakespeare.

Dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince
With falsehoods of most base and damn'd contrivance. Rowe.

DAMNIFIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

To DAMNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, satisfaction: the damified person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,
As if late fight had nought him damified,
He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear. Fairy Queen.

DAMNINGNESS. n. s. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear. Dryden.

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking: but with looks Downcast and damp; yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

DAMP. n. s.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

D A M

Night: not now, as ere man fell, Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black
air
Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom. Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's
height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light;
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun, in the hotter season, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterranean caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the better the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recov'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd. Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Rowe.

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts. Addison.

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rogers.

This commendable resentment against me strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.
2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange.

Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Usury dulls and damps all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this shag. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold Climate, or years, damp my intended wing Depress'd. Milton.

DAMPISHNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon.

DAMPNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;
T was only water thrown on sails too dry. Dryd.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils
it. Mortimer.

DA'MPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected;
gloomy, sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Hayward.

DA'MSEL. n. s. [damoiselle, French.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r. Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun. Dryden.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damels with child. Gey.

DA'MSON. n. s. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life. Shakespeare.

DAN. n. s. [from dominus: as now don in Spanish; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrious import.

Dan Chaucer, well of English undefil'd.

Douglas.

This whimp'd, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid.

Shakespeare.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior.

To DANCE. v. n. [danſer, Fr. dançar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabic, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from ἵμνος.]
To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakespeare.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to carry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you,

To let your father's friend, for three long months,

Thus dance attendance for a word of audience.

Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandeur lov'd thee well;

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shaks.

That I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Beside my threshold. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In pestilences, the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. s. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by musick.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak

Of Herne the hunter.

Shakespeare.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance.

Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd.

Dryden.

DA'NCER. n. s. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept

His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook

The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakespeare.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleasing labours; for great use
As much weariness as perfection brings. Donne.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer,
that he was no graceful goer.

Watson.

It is a usual practice for our funambulous, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying.

Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,

And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.

Prior.

DA'NCINGMASTER. n. s. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes-tricks by a dancingmaster. L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding.

DA'NCINGSCHOOL. n. s. [dance and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing-school,
And teach volutas high, and swift courantes;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shaks.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the institution of apes of quality.

L'Estrange.

DANDELION. n. s. [dent de lion, French.]

The name of a plant.

It agrees, in all respects, with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Müller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouselinda, blithsome maid, is dead!

Gay's Pastorals.

DA'NDIFRAT. n. s. [dandin, French.]

A little fellow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DA'NDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dutch.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites,
Oft skip into our chamber those sweet nights;
And, kiss'd and dandled on thy father's knee,
Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see.

Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools

To dandle fools.

Donne.

DAN

Spotting the Non nump'd, and in his paw Dandled the kid. Milton.
Motion occasions sleep; as we find by the common use of rocking forward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurses arms.
Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.
Shakespeare.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty master.
Addison.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles: not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued. Spenser.

DA'NDLER. n. s. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DA'NDRUFF. n. s. [often written dendruff, from tan, the itch, and bnor, sordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DA'NEWORT. n. s. A species of elder;
called also dwarf-elder, or wall-wort.

DANGER. n. s. [from danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from angaria, Min- shaw from tan, death, to which Ju- nius seems inclined.] Risk; hazard; peril.

They that sail on the sea tell of the danger.
Ecclus.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought. Acts.
He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind.
Waller.

To DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up
For the main soldier; whose quality going on,
The sides o' th' world may danger. Shakespeare.

DA'NGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risk; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting, the multiplying of kingdoms. Sidney.

DA'NGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city.
Ecclus.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects. Sidney.

Already, we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind. Dryd.

DA'NGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.]
Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. Shakespeare's Coriol.

A sort of naughty persons
Have practis'd dangerously against your state, Dealing with witches and with conjurers. Shaks.
It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously. Haywood on Fundamentals.

DAP

Plutarch says, Talsilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advised to apply her mind to poetry. Pausan.

If it were so, which but to think were idle,
My constant love would dangerously be tried.
Dryden.

DA'NGEROUSNESS. n. s. [from dangerous.]
Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of the part affected. Boyle.

To DANGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as hang, bangle, dangle.]
1. To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yon dangling spricocks.
Shakespeare.

He'd rather on a gibbet dangle,
Than miss his dear delight to wrangle. Hook.
Codrus had but one bed; so short to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangle-
ing out. Boyd.

With dangle hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.
Scotch.

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangle o'er the shield? Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The presbyterians, and other fanatics that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment. Swijt.

DA'NGLER. n. s. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex. Ralph.

DANK. adj. [from tuncken, Germ. Stie- ner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He her the maiden sleeping found
On the dank and dirty ground. Shakespeare.

Yet sit they quit
The dank; and, rising on stiff pinions, tour
The mid aerial sky. Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry,
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on His midnight search. Milton.

Now that the fields ere dank, and ways are mire,

Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a sullen day? Milton.

By the rushy-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays. Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and dropping weeds

To the stern god of sea. Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather. Grev.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dank and dankish vault at home
There left me. Shakespeare.

To DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water; a word,
I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a dash by dapping with a grasshopper. Waller.

DAPA'TICAL. adj. [from dapa'ticus, Lat.]
Sumptuous in cheer. Boyle.

DAPPER. adj. [dapper, Dutch.] Lick

Ainsworth.

DAPPLE. adj. [from apple; as pommelé.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated: it is used chiefly of animals.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a tame horse, till they have run over all beings that are, and then pitch on Dapple.

Locke.

To DA'PPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary; to diversify with colours.

But under him a grey steed did he wield,
Whose sides with dappled circles were enight,

Spenser.

The gentle day

Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Shakespeare.

Horses that are dappled turn white; and old squirrels turn grisly.

Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise.

Milton.

The dappled pink, and blushing rose,

Deck my charming Chloe's hair.

Prior.

The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares.

Pope.

DAR. } n. s. A fish found in the Severn.

DART. } Bailly. Dart is the same with Dace.

To DARE. v. n. pret. I durst: the preterit I dared belongs to the active dare; part. I have dared. [beapnan, Saxon; derren, Dutch.] To have courage for any purpose; not to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

Durst thou be as good as thy word now?—
Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man,
I dare; but, as thou art a prince, I fear thee.

Shakespeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;

Who dares do more, is none.

Shakespeare.

They are both hanged; and so would this be,
If he durst steal any thing adventurously.

Shaks.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact.

Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,

Like one who durst his destiny controul.

Dryd.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers.

Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, till it be very fully examined.

Watts.

To DARE. v. a. pret. I dared, not I durst.
To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,

Unless a brother should a brother dare

To gentle exercise and proof of arms.

Shaksip.

Here she stands:

Take but possession of her with a touch;

I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Shaks.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, during them to fight.

Kneller.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the face.

South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Colia's eyes.

Ross.

DAR

Time! I dare thee to discover

Such a youth and such a lover.

Dryden.

Presumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the Thunderer.

Gray.

To DARE Larks. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in amaze till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks.

Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight.

Dryden.

DARE. n. s. [from the verb.] Defiance; challenge.

Seamus Pompeius

Had given the dare to Cæsar, and command'd

The empire of the sea.

Shakespeare.

DARE. n. s. [leuciscus.] A small fish, the same with dace.

DA'REFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance. Not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,

And beat them backward home.

Shakespeare.

DA'RING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant.

Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great.

Prior.

Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart.

Pope.

DA'RINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; courageously; fearlessly; impudently; outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press.

Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with his success,

Too daringly upon the foe did press.

Halifax.

DA'RINGNESS. n. s. [from daring.] Boldness.

DARK. adj. [beopce, Saxon.]

1. Not light; wanting light.

Fleance, his son, who keeps him company,

Must embrace the fate of that dark hour.

While we converse with her, we mark

No want of day, nor think it dark.

Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean.

Leviticus.

In Muscovy the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen.

Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,

Conduct my weary steps! Dryd. and Lee's Oedip.

4. Opaque; not transparent: as, lead is a dark body.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain.

Hooker.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose.

Shakespeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

D A R

The age wherein he liv'd was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see. Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison.

DARK. n. s.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dullest smoke of hell;
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep thro' the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold, hold! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines.

Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure. Obsolete.

Fair, when that cloud of pride, which oft doth dark
Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away.

Spenser.

To DA'KEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with surrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood.

Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write.

Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand. Bacon.

3. To foul; to sully.

The lusts and passions of men do sully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence.

Tillotson.

To DA'KEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DA'K'LING. [a participle, as it seems, from darkle, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? Do not so.

Shakespeare.

Darkling stands

The varying shore o' th' world. Shakespeare.

The wakeful bird

Sings darkling, and, in shadiest covert hid,

Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

Darkling they mourn their fate; whom Circe's pow'r,

With weeds and wicked herbs, from human kind

Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dryden.

DA'RK'LY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly;
gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryden.

DA'RKNESS. n. s. [from dark.]

D A R

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep.

Genesis.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; difficultness to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakespeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded; ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness.

Lake.

6. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

DA'RK'SOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not la-minous.

He brought him thro' a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimm'd were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome which shew the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down.
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green.

Milton.

He, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay. Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'T is a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden.

The darksome pines, that, o'er yon rocks reclin'd,

Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.

Pope.

DA'RLING. adj. [beopling, Saxon; diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'T is not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Ettranger.

Have a care, lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind.

Watts.

DA'RLING. n. s. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakespeare.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,

The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide.

Hallam.

She became the darling of the princes.

Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.]
To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will she thy lipen wash, or hosen darn? Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

D A S

DA'RNEL. n. s. [stallum.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumifer and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare.

Want ye corn for bread?
'T was full of darnel; do you like the taste?

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel cheek the rising corn. Dryd.
To DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille.]

To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darrain'd a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over-hand.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;

Darrain your battle; for they are at hand.

To apply to the fight: of single combatants.

Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,
Redoubted battle ready to darrain. Spenser.

DA'RT. n. s. [dard, French.]

A missile weapon thrown by the hand;
a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Peasbarn.

O'erwhelm'd with darts which from afar they fling,

The weapons round his hollow temples ring.

[In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

To throw offensively.

He whets his tuaks, and turns, and darts the war;

Th' invaders dart their jav'ins from afar. Dryd.

To throw; to emit: as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.

Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;

Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

To DART. v. n.

To fly as a dart.

To let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shaks.

DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man.

To break by collision.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake
them;

And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces.

David's throne shall then be like a tree,
Spreading and overshadow'ing all the earth;

Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash

All monarchies besides throughout the world.

Milke.

D A S

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.

Middling his head, and prone to earth his view,
With ears and chest that dash the morning dew.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, shodded
The sudden breach on 't. Shaks. Henry VIII.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below. Dryden.

6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.

Whacum, bred to dash and draw,
Not wine, but more unwholesome law. Hadik.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Spectator.

7. To form or sketch in haste, carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at the lucky hit,
A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree, that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear;
to depress; to suppress.

His tongue

Dropp'd murens, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling, certain number'd days,
To dash their pride, and joy for man seek'd.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward
joy,

Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oed.

To dash this cavil, read but the practice of christian emperors. South.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.

Nothing dashed the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,

Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;

Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.

Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;

Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star.

Pope.

To DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stop'd in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes ovet
the sides of the vessel. Gibbins.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the tough cascade, all dashing, fall

Johnson.

3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.

Does, tho' without knowing how or why,

D A T

Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,

Thro' sense and nonsense, never out or in. Dryden.

DASH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.

By the touch ethereal round,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below.
They furious spring. Thomson.

2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.

There is nothing which one regards so much with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line ———, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, not together, do signify nothing. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In modern wit, all printed trash is set off with numerous breaks and dashes. Swift.

4. Sudden stroke; blow; act; ludicrous.

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile. — She takes upon her bravely at first dash. Shakespeare.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hark, hark, the waters fall;
And with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground,
To gentle slumbers call. Dryden.

DA'STARD. n. s. [abastanza, Sax.] A coward; a pottron; a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles,
Have suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare.
Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?
How long will Dares wait his dastard foes? Dryden.

Dastard and drunkard, mean and insolent;
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, but the last in fight. Dryden.

Bug-bear thoughts, in the minds of children, make them dastard, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke.

Curse on their dastard souls, they stand astonished!

To DA'STARD. v. s. To terrify; to intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here,
And dastards manly souls with hope and fear. Dryden.

To DA'STARDISE. v. s. [from dastard.]

To intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit; to depress; to terrify; to make an habitual coward.

He had such things to urge against our marriage,
As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle,
And dastardise my courage. Dryden.

DA'STARDLY. adj. [from dastard.] Cowardly; mean; timorous.

Brawl and clamour is so sweet a mask of a dastardly wretch, that he does as good as call himself so that uses it. L'Estrange.

DA'STARDY. n. s. [from dastard.] Cowardliness; timorousness.

DA'TARY. n. s. [datarius.] An officer of the chancery of Rome, through whose hands benefices pass. Dist.

D A U

DATE. n. s. [datto, Fr. from datum, Lat.]

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.
2. The time at which any event happened.
3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare; Tann.

My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receive its date;

And monuments, like men, submit to time. Ap.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declining of this fate, O fixed,
Our date to immortality extend? Bacon.

Then mine,
From the confluent mass, purg'd and refin'd,
New heav'n, new earth, ages of endless day,
Founded in righteousness. Milton.

6. [from dactylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, sure — They call for dates and quinces in the patty. Shakespeare.

DATE-TREE. n. s. See PALM, of which it is a species.

To DATE. v. s. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.

'T is all one in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions of ages ago, or date from the late era of about six thousand years.

To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldus printed, those Du Sijel has bound. Pope.

DA'TELESS. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.

The fly-slow hours shall not determine
The dateless link of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DA'TIVE. adj. [dativus, Latin.]

1. [In grammar.] The epithet of the case that signifies the person to whom any thing is given.

2. [In law.] Those are termed dativi executors, who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England. Arg.

To DAUB. v. s. [dabben, Dut. dauben French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.
She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exod.

2. To paint coarsely.
Flabby daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unsuitable as must want his light to set it off. Gravel.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too thick reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,

He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakespeare.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegancy, than daubed with cost. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;

Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

To DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;

And yet I must. Shakespeare.

DA'UBER. n. s. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

2. A coarse low painter.

What they called his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas, Hangs a new angel two doors from us, As fine as dauber's hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBERY. n. s. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells; and such daubery as this is beyond our element. Shaksp.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.

Not in vain th' industrious kind, With dauby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd. Dryden.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind, Or ear-cloth masts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DA'UGHTER. n. s. [dahttar, Gothick; bohzen, Saxon; dotter, Runick; dobter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters, Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn, With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.

Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now; Or shall I come to you at evening mass?—

—My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now. Shakespeare.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. damitare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,

And fills all mouths with envy or with praise, And all her jealous monarchs with amaze, And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke, Was never heard the nymphs to daunt, Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milt.

VOL. I.

Some presences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on

The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:

With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,

Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. s. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. s. [menedulu. It is supposed by Skinner so named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawol; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] A bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,

For daw to peck at. Shakespeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,

That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,

When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws

The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. s. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Moxon.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night; But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakespeare.

As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;

Aurora d-rwn'd and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,

When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

DAY

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ.
To search the land, but give this day to joy.

Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. s. [bæg, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matth.
Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackm.

Or object new

Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day?
How many days will finish up the year? Shaks.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of
day:

Now spurs the lated traveller space,
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey Drawings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time.

In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man and truest in his days. F. Queen.

I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had.

Woodward.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word; that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Carte's Life of Ormonde.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the
day;

He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey.
Roscommon.

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win their day?
Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.

Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryd.

As men for daybreak watch the eastern skies.
Dryden.

DAYLA'BOUR. n. s. [day and labour.] La- bour by the day; labour divided into daily tasks.

Doth God exact daylabour, light denied.
I fondly ask? Milton.

Daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man that could get an estate in two or three strokes of his pen. Shaks.

DAYLA'BOURER. n. s. [from daylabour.] One that works by the day.

In one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thresh'd the corn
That ten daylabourers could not end. Milton.

The daylabourer in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. La.

DA'YLIGHT. n. s. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the moon or a taper.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night.
Fairy Queen.

Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.

Now go thy way. Shakspeare.

They, by daylight passing through the fleet, Recovered the haven, to the joy of the sieg'd christians. Keats.

He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide
An act to which by honour he is tied. Dryden.

Will you murder a man in plain daylight?
Though rough bears in covert seek detain,
White foxes stay, with seeming innocence;
That crafty kind with daylight can dispense.
Dryden.

If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary mattick colours, they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton's Optics.

DA'YLILY. n. s. The same with apocryphal.

DA'YSMAN. n. s. [day and man.] An word for umpire. Ainsworth.

With day-spring born, here leave me to respire! Milton.

DA'YSTAR. n. s. [day and star.] The morning star.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great:
I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat. Ben Jonson.

Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the daystar in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head. Milt.

DA'YTIME. n. s. [day and time.] The time in which there is light: opposed to night.

In the daytime Fame sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night; she mingl'eth things done with things not done, and is a terror to great cities. Bacon.

My ants never brought out their corn but in the night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ground in the daytime. Addison.

DA'YWORK. n. s. [day and work.] Work imposed by the day; daylabour.

True labourer in the vineyard of thy lord,
Ere prime thou hast th' imposed daywork done. Fairfax.

To DAZE. v. a. [ðæz, Sax.] To overpower with light; to strike with too strong lustre; to hinder the act of seeing, by too much light suddenly introduced.

They smote the glittering armies, as they stand,
With quivering beams, which daz'd the wond'ring eye. Fairfax.

Poor human kind, all daz'd in open day,
Err after bliss, and blindly miss their way. Dry.

DA'ZIED. adj. [rather dazied. See DAISY.]

Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can,
And make him a grave. Shakespeare's Cymb.

To DA'ZZLE. v. a. [See DAZE.]

To overpower with light; to hinder the action of the sight by sudden lustre.

Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon.

How is it that some wits are interrupted;
That now they dazzled are, now clearly see? Davies.

To strike or surprise with splendour.

Those heavenly shapes
Will dazzle now this earthly, with their blase Insufferably bright. Milton.

The places that have either shining sentiments or manners, have no occasion for them: a dazzling expression rather damages them, and serves only to eclipse their beauty. Pope.

Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, or touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

DA'ZZLE. v. n. To be overpowered with light; to lose the power of sight.

Dazzle mine eyes? or do I see three suns?
Shakespeare.

Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young,
And you shall read when mine begins to dazzle.
Shakespeare.

An overlight maketh the eyes dazzle, insomuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

D E A

I dare not trust these eyes;
They dance in mists, and dazzle with surprise. Dryden.

sleeps. Bacon.

5. Unactive; motionless.

The tin sold sometimes higher, and sometimes lower, according to the quick vent and abundance, or the dead sale and scarcity. Carrov.
Nay, there's a time when even the rolling year

Seems to stand still: dead calms are in the ocean,
When not a breath disturbs the drowsy main. Lee.

They cannot bear the dead weight of unemployed time lying upon their hands, nor the uneasiness it is to do nothing at all. Lucke.

6. Empty; vacant.

This colour often carries the mind away: yes,
it deceiveth the sense; and it seemeth to the eye a shorter distance of way, if it be all dead and continued, than if it have trees or buildings, or any other marks whereby the eye may divide it.
Bacon.

Nought but a blank remains; a dead void space;
A step of life, that promis'd such a race. Dryd.

7. Useless; unprofitable.

The commodities of the kingdom they took,

Iron, as soon as it is out of the fire, deadeth straitways.

Bacon's Natural History.

To DEAD. } To DE'ADEN. } v. a.

1. To deprive of any kind of force or sensation.

That the sound may be extinguished or deadeth by discharging the pent air, before it cometh to the mouth of the piece, and to the open air, is not probable.

Bacon.

It is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound.

Haller.

This motion would be quickly deadeth by counter-motions. Glanville's Sceptis Scientific.

We will not oppose any thing to them that a hard and stubborn, but by a soft answer deadeth their force by degrees.

Barnes's Theory.

Our dreams are great instances of that activity which is natural to the human soul, and which is not in the power of sleep to deadeth or abate.

Spectator.

Anodynes are such things as relax the tension of the affected nervous fibres; or destroy the particular acrimony which occasions the pain; or what deadeth the sensation of the brain, by procuring sleep.

Arbutnot on Dec.

DEAD-RECKONING. n. s. [a sea term.] That estimation or conjecture which the seamen make of the place where a ship is, by keeping an account of her way by the log, by knowing the course they have steered by the compass, and by rectifying all with allowance for drift or lee-way; so that this reckoning is without any observation of the sun, moon, and stars, and is to be rectified as often as any good observation can be had.

DEAF. adj. [doof, Dutch.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf.
Shakespeare.

Infected minds
 To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
Shakespeare.

The chief design here intended is to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing. Holder.

If any sins afflict our life
 With that prime ill, a talking wife,
 Till death shall bring the kind relief
 We must be patient, or be deaf. Prior.

Thus you may still be young to me,
 While I can better hear than see:
 Oh, ne'er may fortune shew her spite,
 To make me deaf and mend my sight! Swift.
 It has to before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
 Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses.
Shakespeare.

O that men's ears should be
 To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! Shakespeare.
 Whilst virtue courts them; but, alas, in vain!
 Fly from her kind embracing arms,
Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms.
Roscommon.

Not so: for, once indulg'd, they sweep the main;

Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain. Dry.
 Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,
Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,
 Givest to the roll of death his glorious name. Pope.

Deprived of the power of hearing.
Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:
 No mortal courage can support the fright. Dry.
 Obscurely heard.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
 But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
 Confus'd and chiding like the hollow roar
 Of tides receding from th' insulted shoar. Dryden.
 The rest were seiz'd with sullen discontent,
 And a deaf murmur through the squadrons went.
Dryden.

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place. K. Charles.

DEAL, n. s. [deel, Dutch.]

1. Part.

A great deal of that which had been; was now to be removed out of the church. Hooker.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was formerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning; as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest, a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hooker.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in. Hooker.

To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal;

But sorrow flouted at is double death. Shaksp.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits. Ben Jonson.

The charge some deal thee haply honour may,
 That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd.

Fairfax.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason, a great deal, to doubt of it. South.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause. Addison.

3. [from the verb To deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,
 Unskill'd in all the terms of art?
 Or in harmonious numbers put
 The deal, the shuffle, and the cut? Swift.

4. [deyl, Dutch.] Fir-wood, or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye placed in a room, and the clearer daylight, was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red. Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL. v. a. [deelen, Dutch.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

DEA

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house. Isaiah.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels. Decay of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick. South.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals,
They tell the secret which he first reveals. Prior.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shakspeare.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill.

This seems a vitious use.
Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright. Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suitors are so distasted with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves. Atterbury.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters. Addison.

DEA

True logic is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute; to which the former ages had debased it. Watts' Logic.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them. Spenser's Irish.

Who then shall guide
His people? who defend? Will they not deal
Worse with his followers, than with him they dealt? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience dealt clearly with him, he must deal severely with that. South's Sermon.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he deals thus also with other nations. Tillem.

But I will deal the more civilly with his poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles. Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with in their country. Sage.

DEAMBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Lat.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. s. [decanus, Latin; doyen, Fr.] From the Greek word δῆνα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe.] The second dignitary of a diocese.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbeyes transformed from abbot or prior and convent, to dean and chapter), so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his cong'd elire to the chapter, the chapter then chusing, and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to instal them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon.

DEANERY. n. s. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.

He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal. Clarendon.

And thankfully rest debtor for the first. Shak.

If he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor, straight his body to the touch
Obscureous, as whilom knights were wont,
To some enchanted castle is convey'd. Philips.

There died my father, no man's debtor;
And there I'll die, nor worse nor better. Pope.
The case of debtors in Rome, for the first four centuries, was, after the set time for payment, no choice but either to pay, or be the creditor's slave. Swift.

3. One side of an account-book.

When I look upon the debtor side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetick to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor side, I find little more than blank paper.
Addison.

Her decays very well. Ben Jonson.

And those decays, to speak the naked truth,
Through the defects of age, were crimes of youth. Denham.

By reason of the tenacity of fluids, and attrition of their parts, and the weakness of elasticity in solids, motion is much more apt to be lost than got, and is always upon the decay.
Newton.

Each may feel increases and decays,

And see now clearer and now darker days. Pope.

Taught, half by reason, half by mere decay,
To welcome death, and calmly pass away. Pope.

DEDUCTION. n. s. [deductio, Lat.]

1. Consequential collection; consequence; proposition drawn from principles premised.

Out of scripture such duties may be deduced.
by some kind of consequence; as by long circuit of deduction it may be that even all truth out of any truth, may be concluded. Hobbes.

Set before you the moral law of God, with such deductions from it as our Saviour hath drawn, or our own reason, well informed, can make. Depp.

That by diversity of motions we should spell out things not resembled by them, we must attribute to some secret deduction; but what this deduction should be, or by what mediums the knowledge is advanced, is as dark as ignorance. Glanville.

You have laid the experiments together in such a way, and made such deductions from them, as I have not hitherto met with. Bogel.

All cross and distasteful humours are either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillemont.

A reflection so obvious, that natural instinct seems to have suggested it even to those who never much attended to deductions of reason. Agnes.

2. That which is deducted; defalcation.
Bring then these blessings to a strict account;
Make fair deductions; see to what they amount. Pope.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduct.] Deducible; that is or may be deduced from a position premised.

DEE

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects. Glanville.

DEDUCTIVELY. adv. [from deductive.] Consequentially; by regular deduction; by a regular train of ratiocination.

There is scarce a popular error passant in our days, which is not either directly expressed, or deductively contained, in this work. Brown.

DEED n. s. [dæd, Saxon; daed, Dutch.]

1. Action, whether good or bad; thing done.

And deeds could only deeds unjust maintain. Dryden.

The same had not consented to the counsel and deed. Luke.

We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalridge.

2. Exploit; performance.

I, on the other side,
Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;
The deeds themselves, tho' mute, spoke loud the doer. Milton.

Thousands were there, in darker fame that dwell,

Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

3. Power of action; agency.

Nor knew I not

To be with will and deed created free. Milton.

4. Act declaratory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them, clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hooker.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent. Bacon.
He builds his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds by which he holds his estate upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; the contrary to fiction: whence the word indeed.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen
The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;
So now in very deed I might behold
The pond'rous earth, and all yon marble roof, Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEEDLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive; without action; without exploits.

Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakspeare.

Instant, he cried, your female discord end,
Ye deedless boasters! and the song attend. Pope.

7. DEEM. v. n. part. dempt, or deemed. [dongan, Gothic; doemen, Dutch; deman, Saxon.]

1. A challenge; an invitation to fight.

The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd; Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears, He swung about his head. Shakespeare.

Nor is it just to bring

A war, without a just defiance made. Deje.

2. A challenge to make any impeachment good.

3. Expression of abhorrence or contempt. The Novatian heresy was very apt to start well-meaning souls; who, seeing it bad, and express defiance to apostasy, could not see that it was itself any detection from the faith. Droxy of F. B.

Nobody will so openly bid defiance to common sense, as to affirm visible and direct contradictions. Lat.

DEFICIENCE. } n. s. [from deficio, Lat.]
DEFICIENCY. } tin.]

1. Want; something less than is necessary.

What is to be considered in this case is, whether there be a sufficient fulness or deficiency of blood; for different methods are to be taken. Arbutnot on C.

There is no burden laid upon our persons, nor any deficiency to be hereafter made up by ourselves, which has been our case in so many other subsidies. Adams.

2. Defect; failing; imperfection.

Scaliger, finding a defect in the reason of Aristotle, introduceth one of no less deficiency to himself. Brown's Vulgar Error.

Thou in thyself art perfect, and in thee is no deficiency found. Milton.

We find, in our own natures, too great a deficiency of intellectual deficiency, and defective confessions of human ignorance. Glenn.

What great deficiency is it, if we come short of others?

The characters of comedy and tragedy can never to be made perfect; but always to be drawn with some specks of frailty and deficiency, such as they have been described to us in history. Dryden.

DEFICIENT. adj. [deficiens, from deficio, Latin.] Failing; wanting; defective; imperfect.

O woman! best of all things, as the will Of God ordain'd them: his creating hand Nothing imperfect or deficient left. Milton.

Figures are either simple or mixed: the simple be either circular or angular; and of the circular, either complete, as circles, or deficient, as ovals. Milton.

Neither Virgil nor Homer were deficient in any of the former beauties. Dryden.

Several thoughts of the mind, for which we have either none, or very deficient names, are diligently to be studied. Lat.

DEFICIENT Numbers [in arithmetick] are those numbers, whose parts, added to gether, make less than the integer whose parts they are. Chambers.

DEF

DEFIER. n. s. [from defi, Fr.] A challenger; a contemner; one that dares and defies.

Is it not then high time that the laws should provide, by the most prudent and effectual means, to curb those bold and insolent defiers of Heaven? Tillotson.

To DEFILE. v. a. [aplan, Saxon; from ful, foul.]

1. To make foul or impure; to make nasty or filthy; to dirty.

There is a thing, Harry, known to many in our land by the name of pitch; this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile. Shaksp.

He is justly reckoned among the greatest prelates of his age, however his character may be defiled by mean and dirty hands. Swift.

2. To pollute; to make legally or ritually impure.

That which dieth of itself he shall not eat, to defile himself therewith. Lev.

Neither shall he defile himself for his father. Lev.

Ev'ry object his offence revild;
The husband murder'd, and the wife defild. Prior.

4. To taint; to corrupt; to vitiate; to make guilty.

Forgetfulness of good turns, defiling of souls, adultery, and shameless uncleanness. Wisdom.

God requires rather that we should die, than defile ourselves with impieties. Stillingfleet.

Let not any instances of sin defile your requests. Wake.

To DEFILÉ. v. n. [defiler, Fr.] To march; to go off file by file.

DEFILÉ. n. s. [defile, Fr. from file, a line of soldiers; which is derived from filum, a thread.] A narrow passage; a long narrow pass; a lane.

There is in Oxford a narrow defile, to use the military term, where the partisans used to encounter. Addison.

DEFILÉMENT. n. s. [from defile.] The state of being defiled; the act of defiling; nastiness; pollution; corruption; defecation.

Lust,
By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk,
Lets in defilement to the inward parts. Milton.

The unchaste are provoked to see their vice exposed, and the chaste cannot rake into such filth without danger of defilement. Spectator.

DEFILER. n. s. [from defile.] One that defiles; a corrupter; a violator.

At the last tremendous day, I shall hold forth in my arms my much wronged child, and call aloud for vengeance on her defiler. Addison.

DEFINABLE. adj. [from define.]

1. That may be defined; capable of definition.

The Supreme Nature we cannot otherwise define, than by saying it is infinite; as if infinite were definable, or infinity a subject for our narrow understanding. Dryden.

2. That may be ascertained.

Concerning the time of the end of the world, the question is, whether that time be definable or no. Burnet's Theory.

To DEFINÉ. v. a. [definio, Lat. definir, French.]

DEF

1. To give the definition; to explain a thing by its qualities and circumstances.

Whose loss canst thou mean.

That dost so well their miseries define? Sidney.

Though defining be thought the proper way to make known the proper signification, yet there are some words that will not be defined. Locke.

2. To circumscribe; to mark the limit; to bound.

When the rings appeared only black and white, they were very distinct and well defined, and the blackness seemed as intense as that of the central spot. Newton.

To DEFINÉ. v. n. To determine; to decide; to decree.

The unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he defineth armies of lands and properties. Bacon.

DEFINER. n. s. [from define.] One that explains; one that describes a thing by its qualities.

Your God, forsooth, is found Incomprehensible and infinite;

But is he therefore found? Vain searcher! no:

Let your imperfect definition show,

That nothing you, the weak definer, know. Prior.

DEFINITE. adj. [from definitus, Lat.]

1. Certain; limited; bounded.

Hither to your harbour divers times he repaired; and here, by your means, had the sight of the goddess, who in a definite compass can set forth infinite beauty. Sidney.

2. Exact; precise.

Ideots, in this case of favour, would Be wisely definite. Shakspere.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth in the accusatory libel, or inquisition, which succeeds in the place of accusation, some certain and definite time. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEFINITE. n. s. [from the adjective.] Thing explained or defined.

Special is hardly anything else but the definition of the general; and the general, again, is nothing else but a definite of the special. Ayliffe.

DEFINITENESS. n. s. [from definite.] Certainty; limitedness. Dict.

DEFINITION. n. s. [definitio, Lat. definitión, French.]

1. A short description of a thing by its properties.

I drew my definition of poetical wit from my particular consideration of him; for propriety of thoughts and words is only to be found in him. Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logic.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition. Bentley.

DEFINITIVE. adj. [definitivus, Lat.] Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I make haste to the casting and comparing of the whole work; it being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot. Watson.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.] Positively; decisively; expressly.

DEF

Definitively thus I answer you:
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert,
Unimitable, shuns your high request. Shakspeare.
Bellarmine saith: because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold,
that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once. Hall.
That Metheuselah was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses. Brown.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. s. [from definitive.] Decisiveness. Dict.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. s. [from deflagro, Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of salt-petre did permit us to imagine. Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of wasting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable. Boyle.

DEFLAGRATION. n. s. [from deflagratio, Lat.]
A term frequently made use of in chy-mistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation: as in making Æthiops with fire, with sal prunellæ, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and, therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist. Boyle.

To DEFLECT. v. n. [from deflecto, Latin.]
To turn aside; to deviate from a true course, or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle wheeleth to the west. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

For, did not some from a straight course deflect,
They could not meet, they could no world erect.
Blackmore.

DEFLECTION. n. s. [from deflecto, Lat.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.
Needles incline to the south on the other side of the equator; and at the very line, or middle circle, stand without deflection. Brown.

2. A turning aside, or out of the way.
3. [In navigation.] The departure of a ship from its true course.

DEFLEXURE. n. s. [from deflecto, Latin.]

from defloratus, Latin.]

1. The act of deflowering; the taking away of a woman's virginity.

2. A selection of that which is most valuable.

The laws of Normandy are, in a great measure, the defloration of the English laws, and a transcript of them. Hale.

To DEFLOUR. v. a. [from deflorer, Fr.]

DEF

5. To ravish; to take away a woman's virginity.

As is the lust of an eunuch to deflower a virgin,
so is he that executeth judgment with violence.
Ecclesi.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely man,
And let my spleenful sons this trull deflower.
Shakspeare.

2. To take away the beauty and grace of any thing.

How on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, defleur'd, and now to death devoted!
Alfonso.

If he died young, he died innocent, and before the sweetness of his soul was defleur'd and ravished from him by the flames and follies of a tri-ward age. Taylor.

DEFLOURER. n. s. [from defleur.] A ravisher; one that takes away virginity.

I have often wondered that those defleur'd innocence, though dead to all the sentiments of virtue and honour, are not restrained by humanity. Adams.

DEFLUOUS. adj. [from defluus, Lat.]

1. That flows down.

2. That falls off.

DEFLUX. n. s. [from defluxus, Lat.] Downward flow.

Both bodies are clammy, and bridle the deflux
of humours without penning them in too much.
Bacon.

DEFLUXION. n. s. [from defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downward.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxions from the head. Bacon.

DE'FLY. adv. [from deft.] Dexterously; skillfully. Obsolete. Properly defly.

Lo, how finely the Graces can it foot

To the instrument;

They dauncen defly, and singen soote,

In their merriment. Spenser.

DEFOEDATION. n. s. [from defectio, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written defedation.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instinked through the whole, which the defedation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hurt from shining forth! Bacon.

DEFOECMENT. n. s. [from force.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

To DEFORM. v. a. [from deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinished, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.

Wintry blasts

Deform the year delightless. Tasso.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair.

DEFORM. adj. [from deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,
That whoso kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dower.

Spenser.

DEF

So spake the griesly terror ; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. Milton.
Sight as deform what heart of rock could long Dry-eyed behold? Milton.

DEFORMA'TION. n. s. [deformatio, Lat.]
A defacing ; a disfiguring.

DEFO'RMED. participial adj. Ugly ; want-

DEFO'RMITY. n. s. [deformitas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness ; illfavouredness.
1. in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shaks.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakspeare.

Where sits deformity to mock my body ;
To shape my legs an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shaks.

Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude.

In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt?

Milton.

2. Ridiculousness ; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken ; because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity. Dryden.

3. Irregularity ; inordinateness.
No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming.
King Charles.

DEFO'RSOR. n. s. [from forceur, Fr.]
One that overcomes and casts out by force. A law term. Blount.

To DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Latin.]
To rob or deprive by a wile or trick ; to cheat ; to cozen ; to deceive ; to beguile : with of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. Thessalonians.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long. Eccles.

Churches seem injured and defrauded of their right, when places, not sanctified as they are, prevent them unnecessarily in that pre-eminence and honour. Hooker.

There they, who brothers better claim disown,
Expel their parents, and usurp the throne ;
Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

But now he seiz'd Briseis' heav'nly charms,
And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms. Pope.

There is a portion of our lives which every wise man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country. Dryden.

DEFRAUDA'TION. n. s. [defraudo, Latin.]
Privation by fraud.

Their impurities are worse than any other ;
deluding not only into pecuniary defraudations,
but the irreparable deceit of death. Brown.

DEF

DEFRA'UDER. n. s. [from defraud.] A deceiver ; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow severe,
Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere. Blackmore.

To DEFRA'Y. v. a. [defray, Fr.] To bear the charges of ; to discharge ex-pences.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifices. Mac.

It is easy to lay a charge upon any town ; but to foresee how the same may be answered and defrayed, is the chief part of good advisement. Spenser.

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care ; the state will defray you all the time you stay, neither shall you stay one day the less for that. Bacon.

DEFRA'YER. n. s. [from defray.] One that discharges expences.

DEFRA'YMENT. n. s. [from defray.] The payment of expences.

DEFT. adj. [Dæft, Sax.] Obsolete.

Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed. Gay.

DEFUN'CT. adj. [defunctus, Lat.] Dead ;
deceased.

I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite ;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In me defunct, and proper satisfaction. Shaks.

Here entry and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies, fly. Hudibras.

DEFUN'CT. n. s. [from the adjective.]
One that is deceased ; a dead man or woman.

Nature doth abhor to make his couch
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead. Shakspeare.

In many cases, the searchers are able to report the opinion of the physician who was with the patient, as they receive the same from the friends of the defunct. Grant.

DEFUN'CTION. n. s. [from defunct.]
Death.

Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of king Pharamond. Shaks.

fide decedere*, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult.]

1. To call to combat ; to challenge.

I once again

Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight. Milton.

Where seek retreat, now innocence is fled?
Safe in that guard, I durst even hell defy;
Without it, tremble now when heav'n is nigh.

Dryden.

Agis, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,
To single fight the boldest foe defy.

Dryden.

2. To treat with contempt; to slight.
As many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word
Defy the matter.

Shakespeare.

DEFY'ER. n. s. [from the verb.] A challenger; an invitation to fight: this is now hardly used.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,
His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:

With clangour rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky.

Dryden.

DEFY'ER. n. s. [from defy.] A challenger; one that invites to fight: more properly defier.

God may revenge the affronts put upon them by such impudent defyers of both, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by man.

South.

DEGENERACY. n. s. [from degeneratio, Latin.]

1. A departure from the virtue of our ancestors.

2. A desertion of that which is good.

'T is true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us.

Tillotson.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present.

Swift.

3. Meanness.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery.

Addison.

1. To fall from the virtue of ancestors.

2. To fall from a more noble to a base state.

When wit transgresseth decency, it degenerates into insolence and impiety.

Tillotson.

3. To fall from its kind; to grow wild or base.

Most of those fruits that use to be grafted, if they be set of kernels or stones, degenerate.

Bacon.

DEGENERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough

To fight against me under Piercy's pay;

To dog his heels, and cur'sy at his frowns;

To show how much thou art degenerate.

Shakspeare.

Yet thou hast greater cause to be

Asham'd of them, than they of thee;

Degenerate from their ancient brood,

Since first the court allow'd them food.

Swift.

2. Unworthy; base; departing from its kind or nature.

So all shall turn degen'rate, all deprav'd;
Justice and temperance, truth and faith, forgot!
One man except.

Milton.

When a man so far becomes degenerate as to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly an injury done some person or other.

Locke.

DEGENERATENESS. n. s. [from degene- rate.] Degeneracy; a being grown wild, or out of kind.

2. A falling from a more excellent state to one of less worth.

3. The thing changed from its primitive state.

In plants, these transplantations are obvious as that of barley into oats; of wheat into darnel; and those grains which generally arise among corn, as cockle, aracus, ergilops, and other degenerations.

Brown's Vulgar Errata.

DEGENEROUS. adj. [from degener, Lat.]

1. Degenerated; fallen from the virtue and merit of ancestors.

2. Vile; base; infamous; unworthy.

Let not the tumultuary violence of some men's immoderate demands ever betray me to the degenerous and unmanly slavery, which should make me strengthen them by my consent.

King Charles.

Shame, instead of piety, restrains them from many base and degenerous practices.

South.

Degenerous passion, and for man too base, it seats its empire in the female race;

There rages, and, to make its blow secure,

Puts flattery on, until the aim be sure.

Druid.

DEGENEROUSLY. adv. [from degenerous.]

In a degenerate manner; basely; meanly.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see heroes like Hercules at the distaff, thus degenerous employed!

Ducy of Pitt.

It was my fortune, common to that age,

To love a lady fair, of great degree,

The which was born of noble parentage,

And set in highest seat of dignity. Spenser.

I embrace willingly the ancient received course and conveniency of that discipline, which teacheth inferior degrees and orders in the church of God. Hooker.

Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity. Psalms.

Well then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale. Shakspeare.

Degree being vizarded,

Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakspeare.

This noble youth to madness lov'd a dame

Of high degree, Honoria was her name. Dryden.

Farmers in degree;

He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryden.

But is no rank, no station, no degree,

From this contagious taint of sorrow free? Prior.

2. The comparative state and condition in which a thing is.

The book of Wisdom noteth degrees of idolatry, making that of worshipping petty and vile idols more gross than simply the worshipping of the creature. Bacon.

As if there were degrees in infinite,

And Heav'n itself had rather want perfection

Than punish to excess. Dryden.

Poesy

Admits of no degrees; but must be still

Sublimely good, or despicably ill. Roscommon.

3. A step or preparation to any thing.

Her first degree was by setting forth her beauties; truly in nature not to be misliked, but as much advanced to the eye, as abased to the judgment, by art. Sidney.

Which sight the knowledge of myself might bring,

Which to true wisdom is the first degree. Davies.

4. Order of lineage; descent or family.

King Latinus, in the third degree,

Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

5. Order or class.

The several degrees of angels may probably have larger views; and be endowed with capacities able to set before them, as in one picture, all their past knowledge at once. Locke.

With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er. Dryden.

The filthy swine with delving snout
The rooted forest undermine. Philips.

2. To fathom; to sift; to sound one's opinion. Figuratively.

What's his name and birth?

—I cannot delve him to the root: his father Was call'd Sicilius. Shakespeare.

DELVE. n. s. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pit; a pitfall; a den; a cave.

He by and by

His feeble feet directed to the cry;

Which to that shady delve him brought at last,
Where Mammon erst did sun his treasury.

Spenser.

Such a light and mettled dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by leadmen, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the delves,
For their bairns bread, wives, and selves.

Ben Jonson.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Dick.

DE'LVÉR. n. s. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DELUGE. n. s. [deluge, Fr. from diluvium, Latin.]

1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration.

Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if, with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course;
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells. Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

TO DE'LUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,
By which the delug'd earth would useless grow.

Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable; till, delug'd by the foam,
The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss.

Philips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all.

And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone.

Prior.

DELU'SIVE. adj. [from delusus, Latin.]

Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,
Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear. Prior.

The happy whimsey you pursue,
Till you at length believe it true;

Caught by your own delusive art,
You fancy first, and then assert. Prior.

While the base and groveling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest.

Tatler.

Phænomena so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake. Woodward.

DELU'SORY. adj. [from delusus, Latin.]

Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice. Glaville.

DE'MAGOGUE. n. s. [δημαγωγός.] A ring-leader of the rabble; a popular and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice. Swift.

DEMA'IN.

DEME'AN. } n. s. {domaine, French.}

DENE'SNE.

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians; and opposed to feodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Phillips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided

A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied.

Shakspeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and seignior, though the lands of that county in demaine were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest-trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen: and even there, in general, very unskillfully made. Swift.

To DEMA'ND. v. a. {demandeur, Fr.}

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought; 't is mine, and I will have it. Shakspeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David *demand*ed of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Samuel.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakspeare.

Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,

They crave to be *demand*ed. Shakspeare.

The oracle of Apollo being *demand*ed, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, replied, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Peacham on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'ND. n. s. {demande, Fr.}

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. Daniel.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for books my papers increases daily. Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands; the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land, distress for rent, taking or seising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law. Blount.

DEMA'NDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded, requested, asked for.

All sums demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

DEMA'NDANT. n. s. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands. Coke.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spectator.

DEMA'NDER. n. s. {demandeur, Fr.}

1. One that requires a thing with authority.

2. One that asks a question.

3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.

They grow very fast and fat; which also bettereth their taste, and delivereth them to the demand's ready use at all seasons. Carrey.

4. A dinner; one that demands a debt.

DEME'AN. n. s. [from demen, Fr.] A mien; presence; carriage; demeanour; deportment.

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately. South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he *demean*s himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever. Tillotson.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains,

How with so high a nymph he might

Demean himself the wedding-night. Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad; Else he would never so demean himself. Shakspeare.

DENE'AMOUR. n. s. [demener, Fr.] Garriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain. Sidney.

Angels best like us when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour. Hooker.

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour; then alone,
As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen. Milton.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek: Ill worthy I. Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted: which was manifested in all his actions; especially in his whole demeanour at Rhee, both at the landing and upon the retreat. Clarendon.

DEME'ANS. n. s. pl. properly demesnes.
An estate in lands; that which a man possesses in his own right.

devil.

Will you, I pray, demand that semi-devil,
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?
Shakespeare.

DEMI-GOD. n. s. [semi and god.] Partaking of divine nature; half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them; whose eyes bade him farewell with tears, making temples to him as to a semi-god. Sidney.

Be gods, or angels, semi-gods. Milton.

Transported semi-gods stood round;
And men grew heroes at the sound,
Enflam'd with glory's charms. Pope.

Nay, half in heav'n; except (what 's mighty odd)

A fit of vapours clouds this semi-god. Pope.

DEMOMONSTRABLE. adj. [demonstrabilis, Lat.] That may be proved beyond doubt or contradiction; that may be made not only probable but evident.

The grand articles of our belief are as demomonstrable as geometry. Glasville.

DEMOMONSTRABLY. adv. [from demonstrable.] In such a manner as admits of certain proof; evidently; beyond possibility of contradiction.

He should have compelled his ministers to execute the law, in cases that demomonstrably concern'd the publick peace. Clarendon.

To DEMONSTRATE. v. a. [demonstro, Lat.] To prove with the highest degree of certainty; to prove in such a manner as reduces the contrary position to evident absurdity.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary often involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

DEMOMONSTRATION. n. s. [demonstratio, Latin.]

1. The highest degree of deducible or argumental evidence; the strongest degree of proof; such proof as not only evinces the position proved to be true, but shows the contrary position to be absurd and impossible.

What appeareth to be true by strong and invincible demonstration, such as wherein it is not by any way possible to be deceived, thereunto the mind doth necessarily yield. Hooker.

Where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration. Locke.

2. Indubitable evidence of the senses or reason.

Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

DEMOMONSTRATIVE. adj. [demonstrativus, Latin.]

ficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the sergeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy.

Cowell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN. n. s. [Den, Saxon.]

A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens, and caves, under the earth.

Hooker.

The cave of a wild beast.

What! shall they seek the lion in his den, And shall not find him there?

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,

Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;

The cavern, only to her father known,

By him was to his darling daughter shown.

Dryden.

'T is then the shapeless bear his den forsakes; In woods and fields a wild destruction makes.

Dryden.

Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both.

Gibson's Camden.

ENAY'. n. s. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste: give her this jewel; say, My love can give no place, bide no denay.

Brown.

ENI'AL. n. s. [from deny.]

Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fiercer.

Sidney.

Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father: never make denial; I must and will have Catharine to my wife.

Shakspeare.

D E N

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much.

Bacon.

He, at every fresh attempt, is repell'd

With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him.

South.

DENI'ER. n. s. [from deny.]

1. A contradicter; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man; and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbor, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God.

Wallis.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction?

South.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Ch.

DENI'ER. n. s. [from denarius, Lat.] It is pronounced as deneer, in two syllables. A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sou.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

—No, not a denier.

Shakspeare.

To DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Lat.]

DENISON. } man of the city; or din-nesydd, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one enfranchised.

Denizen is a British law term; which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Dav.

Thus the Almighty Sire began: Ye gods, Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs?

Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow, and to seed as a free denizen of the world.

Graev.

He summons straight his denizens of air;

The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope.

To DENIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetise, being several
To these three places, yet are all in all;
Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;
Falschood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous.

Donne.

DENO'MINABLE. adj. [denomino, Latin.]

That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous effluxion; or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler.

Brown.

To DENO'MINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purposes of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places which are denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage, of such places.

Hooker.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? and, if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills?

Hammond.

DENOMINA'TION. n. s. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls, yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians?

Spenser.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such.

Dry.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like.

South.

All men are sinners; the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination.

Rogers.

DENO'MINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That gives a name; that confers a distinct appellation.

2. That obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

Cocker.

DENOMINA'TOR. n. s. [from denominate.] The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator.

Brown.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, showing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{1}{8}$, the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole.

Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction.

Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because $5)30$ 6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio.

Marr.

 a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Addison.

DESPERATENESS. n. s. [from desperate.]

Madness ; fury ; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also ; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond.

DESPERATION. n. s. [from desperate.]

Hopelessness ; despair ; despondency.

Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
 That Rome can make against them. Shakspeare.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on because we have sinned. Hammond.

DESPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Latin.]

Contemptible ; vile ; mean ; sordid ; worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hosier.

Their heads as low
 Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears
 Of despicable foes. Milton.

All th' earth he gave thee to possess and rule :
 No despicable gift. Milton.

Not less ev'n in this despicable hero,
 Than when my name shook Africk with affright,
 And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone. Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DESPICABLENESS. n. s. [from despicable.]

ping.

To DESPOUND. v. a. [despondeo, Lat.]

To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent.

L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully; for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation.

L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:

The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art.

Dryden.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.

Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind.

Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. s. [from despondent.]

Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Latin.]

Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surprised with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world.

Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock.

Thomson.

DESPOTICAL. } adj. [from despot.] Ab-DESPOTICK. } solute in power; in-limited in authority; arbitrary; uncountable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe;
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lowre.

Milton.
In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coactive and despotic. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotic prince for notwithstanding there is vast extent of land, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotic slavery. Swift.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. s. [from despoti-cal.] Absolute authority.

The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way.

Hawville.
There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

TO DESTINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?

Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd, to eternal woe;

Whatever doing, what can we suffer more?

Milton.

All altars flame; before each altar Res,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice.

Dryden.

From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour.

Prin.

DE'STINY. n. s. [destinée, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy sire or dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatist, Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shelley.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is ty'd to Jove's eternal seat?

Fairy Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve

Willful or no; who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milnes.

Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, at well as pow'r to act, her will.

Dante.

Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be.

Dryden.

At the pit of Acheron Met me i' th' morning; thither he Will come to know his destiny. Shakespeare.

DESTITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth: men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure.

Bacon.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalm.

3. In want of.

Take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of day. Dryden.

Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITUTION. n. s. [from destitute.]

Want; the state in which something is wanted: applied to persons.

That destitution in food and clothing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffers not the mind of man to admit any other care.

Hobbes.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hobbes.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution, is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor,
the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Tristram.

'T is safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Shakespeare.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction though they ~~use them as food~~: as the peacock ~~destroys~~ snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought:

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons, destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Beaumont.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers; the mother too hath her title: which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. s. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Addison.

From the full choir when loud hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n.

Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions; or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and, though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured.

South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour.

Dryden.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look; and, gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight.

Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. s. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers;

Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey

But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,

From these devourers to be banish'd!

Shaks.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence.

Decay of Piety.

Carp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn.

Mortimer.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour.

Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.

Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears: and from his ark

The ancient sire descends with all his train;

Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,

Grateful to heav'n.

Milton.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar: where she kneel'd; and saint-like

Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.

Shakspeare.

One of the wise men having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face.

Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day:

She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray.

Dennis.

Think, O my soul! devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,

Thou saw'st the wide-extended deep

In all its horrors rise!

Addison.

To second causes we seem to trust; without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first.

Atterbury.

DEUSE. n. s. [More properly than deuce, Junius, from Dusius, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'T was the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well! the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it.

Congreve.

DEUTERO'GAMY. n. s. [deutero, and gamē.] A second marriage.

sension of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. s. [beap, Saxon; daaw, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes. Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his tim'rous dreams was still awak'd.

Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakespeare.

She looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shak.
Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed. Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

TO DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dew; which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain

As it had dewed been with timely rain. Fairy Q.
With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

—Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakespeare.

Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shakespeare.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,

Without the vent of words: which these he breath'd. Milton.

Palemon above the rest appears,
In sable garments dew'd with gushing tears. Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground

With headless ranks. Philips.

DEW'BERRY. n. s. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raspberries, which are also of the bramble kind. Hannet.

Feed him with apriocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries. Shakespeare.

DEWBESPARENT. part. [dew and besparent.]

Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbesparent, and were in fold;

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

DEX

He now, to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made.

Fairy Queen.

DE'WDROP. n. s. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sunrise.

I must go seek some dewdrop here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shak.

An host

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower. Milt.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the show'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!

Tickel.

DE'WLAP. n. s. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung. Adrian.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes turn I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;

And when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Shakespeare.

DE'WLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh? Shakespeare.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DE'W-WORM. n. s. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up; and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours, in mid sky
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine Roars stormy. Philips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear;
And fair Aurora from the dewy bed
Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red. Spenser.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.

His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia. Milton.

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Hircnius, and dewy fields. Dryden.

DEXTER. adj. [Latin.] The right; not the left. A term used in heraldry.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my sire's. Shakespeare.

DEXTERITY. n. s. [dexteritas, Lat.]

DEX

1. Readiness of limbs ; activity ; readiness to attain skill ; skill ; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance ; quickness of expedient ; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from peril, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off.

Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity.

South.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors.

Swift.

South.

But then my study was to cog the dice,

And dext'reously to throw the lucky dice.

Dryd.

DE'XTRAL. adj. [dexter, Latin.] The right ; not the left.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. s. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
